Monthly update

Following an unusually good performance in August the market took a breather in September. Most major markets were flattish, measured in euros, with the exception of the Japanese market which was strong. However, the world index as a whole was able to show an uptick in the third quarter; a quarter which traditionally tends to be rocky.

In the absence of earnings reports and other major company-specific news, political events attracted investor interest during the month. Trade tensions between the United States on the one hand and a number of countries and regions on the other, showed disparate developments in September. On September 30, the United States, Mexico, and Canada renegotiated the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). The new deal is called the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement and must be ratified by each country's legislature before going into effect before 2020. The agreement was considered a victory for Trump. On the other hand, the United States' troubles with China appeared to deepen, and a planned round of negotiations was canceled with the United States imposing fresh tariffs on Chinese goods which had been initially announced in June.

In Europe, the fragile political situation in several European countries continued to concern investors. The issues surrounding the British withdrawal from the EU created deeper divisions, both within the Conservative Party and the Labour opposition. The new populist government in Italy also created headlines when it forced its moderate finance minister, Giovanni Tria, to abandon his targets to combat the country's budget deficit. In France, another country faced with major reform needs, President Emmanuel Macron saw his continued decline in public opinion figures. Even the seemingly unwavering Angela Merkel appeared to be looking at a weakened position. All in all, the view of Europe, was of a region finding it difficult to implement the reforms needed for future growth.

Measured in euro, the world index was up by 0.1 percent in September, with banks and information technology at the bottom of the performance ladder. Energy companies and healthcare companies managed to cope relatively better.

FUND PERFORMANCE

Measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), the fund decreased by 0.8 percent. The strength of the Swedish krona during the month weighed down the fund with a decline of 3 percent in Swedish kronor. The month was marked by continued gains in the services, pharma and medtech subsectors. The broader healthcare index (MSCI HC) rose by 1.9 percent while the biotech index (NBI) decreased by 0.4 percent in September, measured in euro. Smaller companies performed worse than the larger companies, which is the main reason why the fund underperformed against the sector's benchmark index.

The month's best contributors for the fund were Alexion Pharmaceuticals and Cigna. The worst contributors were Iovance Biotherapeutics and Alnylam Pharmaceuticals.

Alexion is a US biotechnology company specializing in rare diseases. The company has developed the drug Soliris (eculizumab), an inhibitor of the complement system (part of the immune response system) for the treatment of patients with so-called paroxysmal nocturnal hemoglobinuria (PNH), atypical hemolytic uremic syndrome (aHUS) and generalized myasthenia gravis (gMG). In September, the company reported positive phase III data for Soliris in an additional indication – neuromyelitis optica spectrum disorder (NMOSD). This is also a rare but severe autoimmune-like disease. The condition causes inflammation of the optic nerve and/or spinal cord, which for instance may lead to sudden loss of vision. In the absence of approved therapies for the sickest patients, future sales of Soliris are now expected to be further strengthened. Alexion's share price, which has been lagging for a longer period, reacted very positively to the announcement.

In September, the US insurance company Cigna, which announced a bid for Express Scripts (a pharmacy benefit manager) in March, received clearance by the US Department of Justice to go through with the acquisition. The transaction will most likely be carried out in the fourth quarter. The company expects that the acquisition will generate synergies, diversification and scale in high growth segments, not least in the government-funded healthcare insurance system Medicare. As a result of the Department's approval, the stock rose during the month.

Iovance is a US biotechnology company specializing in the development of new cancer immunotherapy using the body's own tumor-infiltrating lymphocytes (TIL). TIL is a type of cell whose purpose is to identify and actively destroy tumor cells. Moffitt Cancer Center conducted a smaller study, prior to Iovance's own TIL study, in non-small cell lung cancer, and presented the results in September. Two out of six evaluable patients exhibited partial response. The market interpreted this result as too modest, and the stock traded down. There is now some uncertainty about whether or not the company will find another indication for its technology. However, clinical data in malignant melanoma remain extraordinarily promising.

Alnylam is a US biotechnology company that develops RNA interference therapy (RNAi) for genetically defined diseases. In August, the company's drug Onpattro was approved by the FDA, the US Food and Drug Agency, for the treatment of hereditary transthyretin amyloidosis (ATTR amyloidosis). ATTR amyloidosis is a mutation in the genome which leads to a change in the structure of the transthyretin protein and to the formation of so-called amyloid. Such insoluble protein complex is stored in tissues and affects the nervous and organ systems. In September, the FDA published an evaluation that mainly concerned Onpattro's safety profile. The evaluation pointed to a possible increased risk of mortality for patients, due to cardiovascular events, which was not apparent in the company's original documentation. The stock traded down as a result.

OUTLOOK

September's slump was mainly caused by small companies' losses. However, the decline should be considered in context; August was a very strong month, and September is historically often the worst month of the year.

We are now entering the year's most volatile month, October. The approaching midterm elections in the United States, are also likely to cause some stock market jitters. It is likely that the market will be very cautious, not least in our sector, which has been strong during the year and can be said to be the sector which is most dependent on the outcome of the elections. After plenty of drama surrounding trade issues, Trump's private life and the appointment process for a new Supreme Court justice, Democrats are on the warpath and Republicans on the defensive. This is creating even more anxiety for the Senate elections, where the Republicans could lose their majority, even though the seats up for re-election are predominantly Democratic. (Only one-third of senators are up for election in any election year.) We have to consider the market being somewhat cautious and nervous, but one where the view of the healthcare sector is clearly better than it has been for several years. Attractive valuations, higher research and development productivity, robust global demand that provides decent growth and relatively stable prices all mean that the sector will likely find buyers in the event of a downturn.
