MONTHLY UPDATE

Shutdowns are slowing down economies, but investors believe in the future. Following the worst performance in decades from financial markets in March, April proved to be one of the best months in recent times.

Despite high death toll, investors showed some risk appetite
Covid-19, of course, completely dominated the headlines during the month. The number of recorded cases worldwide more than tripled to over three million, and by the end of April nearly a quarter of a million people had died.

However, during the latter part of the month, most Western countries were able to note a gradual slowing in death rates. In parallel, hopes also rose that drugs could mitigate the course of the disease. In particular, promising trial results from the US company Gilead's drug remdesivir led to an improved risk appetite among investors.

2020 is set to be the worst year since World War II

The economic data presented in April were dismal, reflecting the negative impact of the shutdowns. Several "all-time records" were broken, in everything from rising unemployment to reduced air travel and companies' declining expectations. Even if some recovery takes place in the autumn, 2020 will be the worst year for the global economy since World War II.

Central banks and governments around the world continued to launch stimulus packages on an unprecedented scale, giving former ECB president Mario Draghi's classic statement "whatever it takes" a new meaning. These actions also made a significant contribution to the positive undertone of capital markets.

Corporate reports for the first quarter generally showed a good start to 2020 but a sudden slowdown at the end of March. Many companies chose to drastically lower or completely omit their outlooks for the rest of the year. However, there were exceptions particularly in sectors that will benefit from the virus pandemic, at least in the medium term.

Passenger traffic and oil were the big losers

In addition to passenger traffic, where virtually all aircraft were grounded and all cruise ships remained in port, energy was the sector that most significantly reflected the world's sluggish level of economic activity. Demand for oil has fallen by at least 20 percent and although agreements have been reached to reduce production, the excess supply is huge. As a consequence, the price of oil continued to fall in April to just over 60 percent lower than at year-end.

The world index rose but with a wide spread

The world index measured in euros increased in April by 10.9 percent. All sectors showed gains, but with a continued wide spread. Consumer discretionary and energy recorded the largest gains, while utilities and consumer staples lagged behind. Geographically, too, all major regions rose but again with a wide spread. The United States recorded the biggest monthly gains by far, while Hong Kong and Japan recorded more modest increases.

FUND PERFORMANCE

Healthcare was one of the sectors with the highest returns during the month. Much of the defensive nature of the major companies, together with improved sentiment, spurred investor interest in the sector.

The fund increased by 17.0 percent measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and by 15.1 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). All subsectors made positive contributions to fund performance, with biotechnology being the sub-sector which provided the largest positive contribution, followed by pharmaceuticals. The fund's best contributors in April were Immunomedics and Horizon Therapeutics. The worst contributors were Faron Pharmaceuticals and Biogen.

Approval of sacituzumab govitecan doubled Immunomedic's share price

Immunomedics was one of the fund's strongest contributors in April. It is a US biotechnology company that develops antibody-based products not only for the targeted treatment of cancer, but also for autoimmune diseases. The company's product sacituzumab govitecan has shown highly promising data for the treatment of refractory metastatic triple-negative breast cancer, which today has very limited treatment options.

After having faced previous delays, sacituzumab govitecan finally received FDA approval in April, leading to strong stock performance that more than doubled the company's share price in the period.

Horizon Therapeutics stock recovered after drop in sales

Horizon Therapeutics is a US pharmaceutical company specialising in rare diseases. In the treatment of rare diseases, patients often receive the drug by injection during a doctor's visit. Such treatments have, of course, been affected by the pandemic and the calls for social distancing. This has primarily affected two of the company's approved drugs: Krystexxa, for treating gout, and the recently launched Tepezza. Tepezza is an IGF-1R inhibitor for the treatment of thyroid eye disease caused by excessive levels of thyroid hormones.

However, alternative therapies are few and patients will therefore be able to receive treatment when restrictions are lifted. Investors have increasingly accepted a temporary drop in sales, and the stock saw a strong recovery during the month.

New share issue and profit-taking caused Faron Pharmaceuticals stock to fall

The Finnish research company Faron Pharmaceuticals was one of the worst contributors to the fund in April following its strong performance in March. Its March performance was put down to the fact that its drug candidate Traumakine, a recombinant interferon beta-1a, could possibly alleviate the inflammatory process that is seen in the lungs of patients with Covid-19 and which can result in permanent damage to lung tissue. The company is now taking part in a comprehensive global clinical trial for the treatment of severe pneumonia which also includes Covid-19 patients.

Its weak stock performance in April was caused partly by the company's new share issue and partly by profit-taking following its strong stock performance in March.

Aducanumab's bumpy road drove down Biogen stock

Biogen is a US research company. The company's products that treat multiple sclerosis (MS) account for the majority of its sales. However, generic competition is expected to lead to a decrease in sales. To replace the lost sales, Biogen has high hopes for its antibody against beta-amyloid plaques which are considered to be a factor behind the development of Alzheimer's disease.

However, the development of aducanumab has been shaky, causing highly volatile share price performance over the past year. The medical need is huge, so despite limited data for aducanumab's clinical profile, Biogen is in discussions with the FDA about the conditions that would allow for market approval. Biogen had earlier announced that it would submit an application in the first quarter of 2020 so its share price plummeted when the company said in its interim report that this would not happen until the end of the summer.

OUTLOOK

After having been in shutdown, most of the world's economies will now be gradually reopened. Part of this was discounted in April's performance. Many industries, though, are suffering from overcapacity as they face dwindling demand which will continue for some time. This was clearly demonstrated by the variability in performance in April. Some sectors performed better than others, as companies operating with overcapacity struggled with profitability.

Healthcare has recovered surprisingly well

The healthcare sector is one of the sectors that has, overall, coped the best with the major decline in the market. Its recovery was surprisingly strong. Underlying demand for healthcare is considered high, and patients are expected to return relatively quickly to healthcare facilities once the uncontrolled spread of infection has been tamed and patient safety can be guaranteed.

One critical question is how the healthcare system will succeed in separating the continued flow of new Covid-19 patients from a growing number of people with untreated conditions of other diseases resulting in an accumulation of treatment needs. Hospitals around the world are grappling with this issue and we believe that they will try a number of different solutions. Basically, however, it is a matter of triage, systematic testing procedures and stricter hygiene standards. The use of remdesivir, the new drug from Gilead, is likely to make it easier for healthcare procedures to return to normal levels as the pressure on intensive care eases up.

We believe that the market's interest in healthcare will continue

From the perspective of equity markets, we expect to see the major renewed interest in the healthcare sector continue. Underlying demand is robust, the willingness to pay remains high, and the capacity to provide care and treatments has only been temporarily reduced.

However, companies in the sector are impacted differently by the pandemic, and we have increased the fund's share of companies that we believe can best withstand a new possible Covid-19 wave in the autumn. We are optimistic that the sector can and will continue its recovery and that valuations might soon even rise above their historical averages.
