MONTHLY UPDATE

The world economy is shrinking, but the worst might be over. Covid-19 has affected economies around the world in a way that we have not experienced since the Second World War. Although most Western countries noted a slowdown in both the spreading of the infection and the number of deaths per day in May, the pandemic continued to have an immense impact on global economic activity.

Positive performance in May

After sharp losses in the financial markets in March followed by a strong recovery in April, performance continued to be positive in May.

A clear indicator of the state of the world economy is reflected in the demand for oil. After the meltdown in March and April, demand increased in May and, combined with production cuts, this led to an increase in oil prices. A tight supply-demand balance is now expected as early as the summer, and oil prices climbed more than 30 percent in May.

Although economic data continued to be dismal, many changes on the margin showed slight improvements in May. This supported the thesis that the worst is behind us and that the economy will gradually strengthen as various countries begin to open up their societies.

Deteriorating US-China relations

Relations between the United States and China deteriorated during the month when President Trump pinned the blame for the virus outbreak squarely on China and China's National People's Congress decided to introduce new security laws for Hong Kong. The outside world viewed the latter as the end of Hong Kong's semi-autonomous status which further increased the risk of a sharpened tone in the trade dispute between the two countries.

At the end of the month, serious trouble flared up in the US. A black man died during a police intervention in Minnesota, leading to widespread protests. A few days later, the situation deteriorated and the demonstrations developed into fully-fledged riots in several major cities. Eventually, the National Guard was mobilized in several states. At the time of writing, it is difficult to assess how long this unrest will last and how serious it will be. The possibility does exist that it will affect the outcome of the upcoming US election and reduce the likelihood of Trump being re-elected.

Modest increases in global indices

Global stock market indices continued upwards in May, measured in euros, with an increase of 2.6 percent. There was a large spread between sectors with information technology and consumer discretionary on the plus side while energy recorded a decline. The differences were also wide geographically. NASDAQ and Japan recorded the biggest gains while Hong Kong stood out on the downside.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The healthcare sector performed in line with the global market, albeit with a significant spread between subsectors. Biotechnology continued to show strong momentum, with valuations reaching levels we had not seen since 2015. Pharmaceuticals performed relatively weaker than other subsectors.

The fund increased by 10.9 percent measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and by 8.6 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). All subsectors made positive contributions to fund performance, with biotechnology making the largest positive contribution followed by the fund's holdings in the pharmaceutical subsector. The fund's best contributors this month were Horizon Therapeutics and MacroGenics. The worst contributors were Gilead Sciences and Radius Health.

Tepezza sends up the value of Horizon Therapeutics stock

Horizon Therapeutics is a US pharmaceutical company specialising in rare diseases. The company's recently launched Tepezza got off to a flying start, and sales in the first quarter beat market expectations by a good margin. Tepezza is an IGF-1R inhibitor for the treatment of thyroid eye disease caused by excessive levels of thyroid hormones. Apart from surgery, effective therapies have been lacking. The launch of Tepezza has been very well received by treating physicians who see broad potential for the product at different stages of the disease. In some cases, they are now considering using Tepezza as a first-line treatment after highly positive clinical results.

Sales forecasts for Tepezza have now been raised following strong first-quarter sales, sending Horizon's share price up.

Macrogenics stock triples in value

Macrogenics is a US research company specialising in cancer and advanced antibody technologies. Margetuximab, the company's most advanced development project, is being developed for the treatment of HER2-positive breast cancer. However, survival data have so far not shown any improvement over standard of care, thereby holding back the valuation of the company.

When the company published its interim report, however, new clinical data were presented for several development projects in the company's early research portfolio, which spurred renewed interest among investors. Macrogenics' share price nearly tripled during the period.

Gilead share price remains weak despite remdesivir

Gilead Sciences is a mature US biotechnology company whose share price has been dormant for years due to the company's mediocre growth prospects. However, new interest in the company and its stock was generated when Gilead announced that they were evaluating the antiviral drug remdesivir, originally developed to treat Ebola, for patients with Covid-19. Remdesivir is the only approved drug to date for the treatment of Covid-19 in the United States. Clinical studies show that the drug accelerates the recovery of patients with Covid-19 who are being cared for in hospitals. Remdesivir also appears to improve survival rates although this improvement was not statistically significant.

Although remdesivir will be a key component in the treatment arsenal for Covid-19, it is not a miracle treatment. The weak share price in May reflected the disappointment of investors, who had hoped for even better clinical outcome with the drug.

Lowered full-year outlook negatively impacted Radius Health share price

Radius Health is a US pharmaceutical company which derives most of its revenue from Tymlos, a product for the treatment of osteoporosis. Tymlos has consistently increased its market share since its launch in 2017, and the product currently has a market share of just over 40 percent.

However, the number of new patients starting treatment with Tymlos has decreased because of the shutdowns, and the full-year outlook was revised down by company management in its interim report. These factors had a negative effect on the company's share price.

OUTLOOK

After a surprisingly strong recovery for the stock market in general and the healthcare sector in particular, we should be facing somewhat calmer developments going forward – perhaps with a minor correction after the strong run. However, the June-July summer period tends to yield positive returns, which is also true for presidential election years in the United States. We remain optimistic in the short term, too. However, the unrest in the United States with the accompanying riots and vandalism might dampen the mood of the stock market, particularly if the riots become unmanageable and protracted.

All indications point to a good 2020 for the fund

The valuation of the sector is now back to its average level from a historical perspective. As record-low interest rates seem set to persist due to lower capacity utilisation and higher unemployment in the global economy, the P/E expansion for the healthcare sector is likely to continue. For the moment at least, the market is also finding it difficult to see that a drug reform following the US election would drastically upset profitability prospects.

All in all, this represents a big difference in sentiment from previous years. Widespread enthusiasm for the increasing pace of innovation will provide further support for rising share prices. 2020 is thus poised to be a good year for the fund.
