MONTHLY UPDATE

After two strong trading months in April and May, growth was more muted in June. The stock market gains continued into early June, in particular for cyclical sectors. However, in line with the growing unease, primarily at the increased spread of Covid-19 in the US, the market changed, and investor interest focused on growth companies once again. Largely on the back of this shift, the world index recorded another strong month. Taken as a whole, the period from April to June 2020 was the single best quarter since 1998.

Demonstrations and the spread of infection alarmed investors

Investor attention was focused almost entirely on the US in June. There was widespread alarm at the demonstrations against racism in general and the police in particular (Black Lives Matter) and at the increase in the spread of coronavirus in a number of populous states. New restrictions were re-introduced in a number of states including California and Texas shortly after the spring lockdowns had been ended. The leading US expert on infectious diseases, Anthony Fauci, expressed concern at the end of the month that infections could get out of control unless the behaviour of the population changed.

Apart from the US, which was the worst affected country in the world in terms of absolute figures, developments in countries such as India, Russia and Brazil continued to be very concerning. On the other hand, in other parts of the world and in much of Europe in particular, the pandemic appeared to be in decline, with fewer infections and falling death rates.

June saw decreasing support for President Trump in the opinion polls, and the markets started to discount a win for Joe Biden in the autumn presidential election. As the Democrats are traditionally regarded as less business-friendly than the Republicans, investors' risk appetite decreased, in particular within sectors seen as sensitive to state intervention, such as banks.

Will the recovery be fast or slow?

New lockdowns and other significant events in numerous countries, above all in parts of the US, mean that the forecasts for economic recovery are questionable. Unwelcome events in June included the failure to reach an agreement on a major EU rescue package, the lack of progress in the negotiations on the UK exit from the EU, the global reaction to China's increasingly tighter grip on Hong Kong, and conflicts on the border between China and India.

The improvements in economic statistics that were visible in May continued into June, although activity was much lower than before the pandemic. Some analysts foresaw a V-shaped recovery, while others said it would be a very long time until economies were fully restored.

The world index rose by 1.7 percent in June, measured in EUR. Once again, there was a large spread between the sectors, with information technology and durable consumer goods in the lead, while infrastructure services and healthcare recorded declines. Although all major markets recorded gains, the differences were significant. Hong Kong and Nasdaq enjoyed big upswings, while Japan and the S&P 500 recorded more modest positive changes.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The healthcare sector performed less well in June than the global market, albeit with a significant spread between its subsectors. Biotechnology was the only subsector that continued its positive development from the previous month. Other subsectors contracted during the month.

The fund increased by 0.8 percent measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR). Biotechnology and pharmaceuticals made positive contributions to the fund's growth, while service and medical devices contributed negatively. The fund's best contributors in June were Macrogenics and Esperion Therapeutics. The worst contributors were Novocure and Anthem.

Macrogenics' price rose dramatically after promising clinical data

Macrogenics is a US research company specialising in cancer and advanced antibody technologies. Margetuximab, the company's most advanced development project, is being developed for the treatment of HER2-positive breast cancer. However, survival data have so far shown no improvement over standard treatment, thereby holding back the valuation of the company.

When the company published its interim report, however, new clinical data were presented for several development projects in the company's early research portfolio, which spurred renewed interest among investors. After profit-taking at the start of the period following the large annual ASCO cancer conference, Macrogenics' share price rebounded strongly in the second half of the month, making the company one of the fund's best contributors in June.

Esperion's new products had a positive effect on its share price

The US pharmaceutical company Esperion Therapeutics was one of the fund's best contributors in June. The company's product Nexletol (bempedoic acid) is a tablet that lowers certain blood lipids (LDL). It can be used either as a monotherapy or as a combination therapy with the substance ezetimibe (in which case it is called Nexlizet). Both versions of the product were approved by the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) earlier this year but the ongoing Covid-19 pandemic has impeded the launch process. Despite this, prescriptions of the new products enjoyed an upward trend in June which had a positive effect on the share price.

Novocure's share price fell due to concern over development projects

Novocure is a US medical device company that has developed a novel therapy to treat cancer. The therapy uses electric fields tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumour growth. The company's technology is approved for the treatment of glioblastoma (an aggressive form of brain tumour) and mesothelioma (an aggressive form of lung cancer). Novocure is also conducting studies on other cancer indications. Increased use in several of these indications would represent significant sales potential for Novocure, as has occasionally been reflected in its valuation.

Now, however, there is some concern among investors that important studies may be delayed because of possible difficulties recruiting patients due to the Covid-19 pandemic. This concern caused Novocure's share price to fall in June.

Anthem's share price was affected by the virus and politics

Anthem is a fully integrated US health insurance company. Most of the care that was not related to Covid-19 was suspended at the start of the pandemic, which resulted in a dramatic fall in the health insurance companies' expenses in the second quarter. In addition, it became clear in the spring that Bernie Sanders would not be selected as the Democratic presidential candidate. This, in turn, reduced the likelihood of Medicare For All, a proposal that would make it very difficult for health insurance companies to maintain their current business models with the same profit outlook. Consequently, the share prices for health insurance companies rose substantially in April and May.

However, unlike pharmaceutical companies, this subsector is relatively cyclical. When the coronavirus infection rate rose in June, uncertainty about economic recovery in the US also increased and this had a negative impact on the company's share price.

OUTLOOK

The financial markets are enjoying a period of strong recovery as a result of expansive monetary policy and rescue packages from all the world's leading economies.

The development of Covid-19 is decisive

The trading outlook for the next six months depends on whether the Covid-19 pandemic can be brought under control. Progress in terms of infection control, therapeutic procedures, medicines and vaccines would contribute to greater confidence. Despite alarming signs of increased infection in the southern US, the pandemic will be defeated sooner or later. We are optimistic that major advances are being made in several areas. Our opinion is that

- mortality will continue to fall as a result of improved therapeutic procedures and new medicines
- vaccines will become widely available, relatively-speaking, in 2021
- social distancing measures will be refined
- 'test and trace' will be greatly increased

It would be very surprising if all of these advances did not make it possible to bring the pandemic to an end. However, the speed at which these advances occur is essential to how capital markets will develop. Consequently, there is every reason to be cautious as the market sentiment could turn negative in the short term.

We are positive about the future, whatever the outcome of the US election

The sector will be characterised by a certain level of volatility both before and after the presidential election in the US later this year. However, we are optimistic about the sector's opportunities to deliver better than expected sales and earnings growth, based on its very strong fundamentals.

In the months to come, the election will increasingly take centre stage in the media. The likelihood of a Trump victory has fallen dramatically, and Biden is now way ahead in the opinion polls. This may have a negative impact on investor interest in the healthcare sector. Biden will probably attempt to introduce major healthcare reforms, and the market will naturally be very cautious.

However, we are convinced that Biden's first priority will be to expand Obamacare, which would be mostly positive for the sector. We also believe that any pharmaceutical reform proposals will be revised by the Senate in such a way that conditions in the industry will continue to be largely favourable.
