MONTHLY UPDATE

Higher profits, more people vaccinated – but perhaps higher taxes. April was yet another in a series of good months on most world markets, with many stocks hitting new all-time highs. Major fluctuations in the foreign exchange market, however, resulted in significant differences in monthly returns depending on the base currency.

Strong reporting season kicked off 2021

The reporting season's first quarter got off to a strong start, and many companies reported unexpectedly good sales and earnings as demand improved and the effects of reduced costs took hold. However, we note a more subdued outlook for the remainder of 2021 because of uncertainty over the pace of the recovery. Bottlenecks in the availability of inputs were also a recurring theme. For example, much of the automotive industry warned of continuing production constraints due to a shortage in semiconductors.

Inflation worries faded and bond yields fell after their rapid rise in the first quarter. Moreover, central banks seem unconcerned over persistent inflationary cost pressures as economies open up. Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell announced, for example, that the Fed intends to leave interest rates unchanged over the next three years.

Biden's plans were no worry to investors

Besides quarterly reports, political trends in the US were in focus as usual. After the Biden administration announced a number of major stimulus packages, its plans for partially funding them are crystallizing. Raising corporate taxes was an already known option, but in April the ambition to sharply increase capital gains taxes was also revealed. While this could potentially have negative repercussions on capital markets, investors did not appear to be noticeably concerned.

With the exception of the catastrophic developments in India, most countries are now reporting an improved situation in terms of the pandemic. Although the spread of infection remains high, the pressure on healthcare is easing and vaccinations are picking up, boosting confidence that economies will experience strong growth during the rest of 2021.

Equity markets and world indices rose in April

Another good month for stocks overall, and world indices rose. Information technology and consumer discretionary led the gains, while energy and industrial companies fell. In terms of regions, Europe and the US rose in April, while Japan and Hong Kong underperformed.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased 1.7 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The subsectors medical technology and services contributed positively to the fund's performance in April, while biotechnology and pharmaceuticals detracted from performance.

The month was marked by the expectations and outcomes of the first-quarter earnings reports that have just begun to appear. Medical technology and services exceeded market expectations while most pharmaceuticals did not, fully in line with our expectations. The market, however, focused mainly on companies' forward-looking statements, where the overall assessment was that the continued post-pandemic recovery will support growth during the second half of the year.

The fund's best contributors this month were Novocure and Intuitive Surgical. The worst contributors were Adverum Biotechnologies and Fibrogen.

Value of Novocure stock rose sharply following IDMC review

Novocure is a US medical technology company that has developed a novel therapy to treat cancer. The therapy uses electric fields tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumor growth. The company's therapy already has two approved indications. Novocure also conducts clinical trials in several other tumor types.

In April, Novocure announced that IDMC, an independent monitoring committee tasked with analyzing data and monitoring the safety of participants in clinical trials, updated its recommendations for the ongoing LUNAR trial for the treatment of non-small cell lung cancer. The independent experts suggested that the trial's patient population and follow-up time could be reduced. They also stated that it is possibly unethical to continue recruiting patients to the control arm.

It is still early to draw any direct conclusions on the outcome of IDMC's review. The market, however, interpreted the new directives positively, sending the stock up 54 percent in April.

Intuitive Surgical stock rose on strong recovery and good outlook

Intuitive Surgical is a US medical device company. With its robot technology, the company has revolutionized the market for minimally invasive surgery. Intuitive Surgical has about 6,000 robots installed in hospitals in roughly 70 different countries. Its market potential is significant and the penetration rate still low. The company has a well-defined strategy, which includes new robotic platforms, further expansion of surgical indications and geographical expansion, and is seemingly way ahead of competitors.

Intuitive Surgical issued its quarterly report in April, delivering a positive surprise of strong growth in its installed base of robots and procedures. In parallel, the company announced its full-year outlook indicating stronger-than-expected growth. The stock thus performed positively, increasing by 17 percent in April.

Adverum's share price plummeted after canceled phase II trial

Adverum Biotechnologies is a US biotechnology company focusing on gene therapies. With its drug candidate ADVM-022, the company is developing a treatment for wet age-related macular degeneration (AMD) and diabetic macular edema (DME), the two most common causes of severe visual impairment and blindness in the Western world. The condition is currently treated using so-called VEGF inhibitors, which block the growth of new blood vessels in the eye. Treatment is effective but requires frequent injections. ADVM-022 is a gene therapy that allows a single injection of aflibercept (Eylea), a currently approved VEGF inhibitor.

In April, a serious adverse reaction was detected in a patient with DME who participated in a phase II trial with ADVM-022. The patient developed a severe inflammation of the treated eye, leading to abnormally low intraocular pressure and loss of vision. The company chose to discontinue the study, causing the share price to decrease sharply.

Worsening US approval outlook sent FibroGen's share price down

FibroGen is a US biotechnology company. The company's drug candidate roxadustat is an oral treatment for anemia that shows promise for replacing treatment using recombinant erythropoietin in patients with chronic kidney disease. Roxadustat is approved in China, where AstraZeneca has market rights. However, the road to approval in the US has been fraught with several setbacks.

In April, the company presented an updated statistical analysis comparing roxadustat with standard treatment. Compared with the data presented earlier, the updated analysis showed that roxadustat does not reduce the risk of heart attack and stroke as much as previously believed. In addition to declining confidence in company management, the prospects for US approval are now considered to be deteriorating, which caused the share price to decrease.

OUTLOOK

With the start of the reporting season as a starting point, we see that other sectors are emerging from the pandemic earlier than healthcare. The reasons are twofold. For one, the first quarter is traditionally the weakest for our sector. Secondly, there were substantial additional drug sales in last year's first quarter, both to end customers and in the distribution chain as part of the preparations for isolation, lockdowns and quarantine. Nevertheless, we consider the rest of the year as potentially very strong due to favorable comparisons with 2020 and a pent-up need for care.

It is easy to underestimate the leverage that pharmaceutical companies have as the global economy opens up, when companies have a substantial proportion of fixed costs and high gross sales margins. We therefore choose to initially have a fairly high net exposure at the beginning of the second quarter, as we believe that the healthcare sector can gain renewed momentum in the stock market. Low valuations, combined with accelerating sales and profits, can give us a strong second quarter.

We believe the US is set for a drug price reform

As for US policy, it looks like Biden is now leaving it up to Congress to submit a proposal for drug prices in the autumn, that is, to Speaker of the House of Representatives Nancy Pelosi. In light of weak Democratic majorities in both the House and the Senate, we see a clear need to find compromises in order to pass a price reform. Of course, tensions remain high. A lot is at stake for the industry.

We choose to see the positive in this situation. Autumn 2021 is a critical period for Democrats to show they are capable of living up to their election promises and piloting through a long-awaited reform that involves lower drug prices. However, this can only be achieved if they choose to balance different interests, such as lower prices against greater availability. A carefully balanced reform is likely to increase interest in the pharmaceutical sector.
