MONTHLY UPDATE

The annual central banking conference in Jackson Hole, the evacuation of Afghanistan and the Delta variant of the coronavirus were three events that made their mark on capital markets in August. As the otherwise strong second-quarter reporting season drew to a close, investor focus shifted to central banks, geopolitics and viruses. Yet risk appetite persisted. August, which can be a fairly volatile month, ended on the plus side for most stock markets, and new record highs were set in both the United States and Europe.

US Federal Reserve gave investors the message they wanted to hear

The chairman of the US Federal Reserve, Jerome Powell, gave a speech at the Jackson Hole conference that was apparently just what investors wanted to hear. Asset purchases will likely be tapered (gradually reduced) by the end of the year, but this does not equate to an interest rate hike. The potentially inflation-driven bottlenecks in the global economy, ranging from rising energy prices and transportation costs to a shortage of semiconductors, seemed to be considered transitory by the Fed.

20-year presence of the US in Afghanistan ended in chaos

After 20 years, the United States and its allies left Afghanistan. Contrary to President Biden's pledges of an orderly withdrawal, the pull-out took a dramatic turn with the lightning offensive by the Taliban and subsequent scenes of mayhem and bombings at Kabul airport. Although the average American is tired of the long US commitment to the country, the retreat brought back painful memories of the evacuation of Saigon nearly 50 years ago. Republican politicians lost no time either in criticizing the president for the lack of planning. The question, however, is how long the criticism will last in view of the upcoming budget negotiations and other domestic policy issues.

Mainly the unvaccinated become seriously ill with Covid-19

Despite an increasing vaccination rate, the Delta variant of the coronavirus continued to spread. The unvaccinated, however, are almost exclusively the ones suffering from severe disease, and investors appear to be focusing on the fact that further vaccinations and herd immunity will reduce the negative economic impact.

After a stable summer, US markets rose while Europe and Hong Kong lagged behind

August ended an unexpectedly stable summer period, which followed a strong first half-year. Overall, global indexes recorded an upturn. Information technology and banks were the top performers while energy and commodities noted declines. In terms of regions, the United States saw the biggest gains while Europe lagged behind and Hong Kong fell.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased by 2.0 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The healthcare sector performed in line with the overall market during the month. All subsectors contributed positively to the fund's returns except services, which detracted from performance. While regular care is slowly returning to normal levels, the increased spread of the Delta variant has contributed to higher costs for Covid-related care.

The fund's best contributors this month were Dynavax Technologies and Guardant Health. The worst contributors were Jazz Pharmaceuticals and Essa Pharma.

Hopes for future earnings from vaccine collaborations boosted Dynavax share price

Dynavax is a US biotechnology company that develops vaccines. HepIsav is a recombinant vaccine against hepatitis B that is approved in the United States and Europe. The company's unique adjuvant technology, based on the activation of so-called toll-like receptors, is being evaluated in several Covid-19 vaccine collaborations. Medigen, one of the companies that in-licenses Dynavax's CpG 1018 adjuvant, has launched its vaccine in Taiwan, while French Valneva is expected to present Phase 3 data for its vaccine in the fall.

Future adjuvant deliveries for Covid-19 vaccines could potentially bring significant revenues to Dynavax, which explains its strong share price performance during the month.

Expectations for Guardant Health's ECLIPSE study sent stock up

Guardant Health is a US diagnostic company. The company develops and conducts various liquid biopsy studies for early cancer screening, therapy selection and recurrent monitoring of cancer patients. The majority of the company's sales are derived from tests aimed at determining a tumor's genetic profile. Through tumor profiling, treatment can be adapted to the individual patient's circumstances.

With its LUNAR-2 assay, Guardant hopes to simplify cancer diagnosis through a blood test. Recruitment for ECLIPSE, a study of early detection of colorectal cancer, is expected to be completed in 2021. As the company moves towards launches of new tests and the outcome of ECLIPSE approaches, the stock performed strongly in August.

Market concerns over competition from generics behind Jazz Pharmaceuticals weakened share price

Jazz is a US pharmaceutical company with a strong growth profile that focuses on specialized drugs in neurology and cancer. The company has had a stated diversification strategy and has made major progress throughout the year. They have successfully shifted patients treated with the narcolepsy drug Xyrem to the second generation, Xywav, and they have also acquired GW Pharmaceuticals.

The transition to Xywav has exceeded expectations, and almost one-third of patients have now switched to the new drug. However, a decline in Xyrem sales might lead to the earlier introduction of generics in line with agreements which Jazz has signed with several generics companies. This caused market turmoil during the month and the stock performed weakly. We believe, however, that the advantages of lower Xyrem sales outweigh the disadvantages, since the reason for the decline in Xyrem sales is the shift to Xywav – where Jazz has better patent protection.

Deferred results from Phase 1 study sent Essa Pharma share price down

Essa Pharma is a US biotechnology company that is developing a new drug for castration-resistant prostate cancer (CRPC). The company's drug candidate EPI-7386 has a unique binding to the androgen receptor compared to other drugs with a corresponding action mechanism, which could entail a lower risk of resistance development. The company also intends to evaluate EPI-7386 in combination with traditional androgen receptor inhibitors in order to study possible synergy effects.

The company announced in August that it would expand the Phase 1 study with more patients and evaluate higher doses, which meant postponing the presentation of the results from early October 2021 to the first half of 2022. The market interpreted the announcement as negative, causing the stock to decline sharply.

OUTLOOK

The month of August was marked by consolidation. Small and medium-sized biotechnology companies finally stopped falling, but many companies in the sector were still not attracting renewed interest. But this is usually what happens. After the first half-year, the stock market tends to take a break, people go on holidays, and stock purchases in new companies – or bargain hunting in stocks that have significantly declined in value – are not yet a priority. 2021 was no exception.

Upcoming reconciliation budget a source of worry for world stock markets

Many see dark clouds on the stock market horizon in the United States. The most worrying situation is surely in Congress, where the battle lines will involve the size and content of the upcoming budget reconciliation. The budget will be considered in the various congressional committees, and Republicans have several strategies in place to prevent an overly expansive, left-leaning budget. Their key strategy is trying to influence and negotiate with the more moderate Democratic senators and representatives. Another is trying to delay the process and put it in doubt. And a third is influencing public opinion and Democratic politicians who are at risk of losing their congressional seats in next year's midterm elections.

The real threat, though less likely to be realized, is to delay raising the debt ceiling, meaning the nominal amount that limits how much the government can borrow. This maximum threshold must be gradually increased in line with financing the government deficit. There have been several dramatic crises in past years around raising the debt ceiling, including 2011 and 2013-2014.

Unless a budget compromise can be hammered out in Congress and agreed upon by moderate Democratic and Republican senators in particular, the Republicans are threatening to use this "nuclear button" and delay raising the debt ceiling. This could lead to a new debt ceiling crisis like those in 2011 and 2013-14. Mitch McConnell, the leading Republican senator, has already made such a threat, but for now the markets view his statement as being mainly a manifestation of political rhetoric.

Our sector is likely to remain strong even if the Democrats' healthcare reform is passed

The eventualities outlined above, of course, will affect the stock market as a whole. The healthcare sector will also be impacted by the Democrats' persistent efforts to pass a healthcare reform in the autumn reconciliation process that aims, among many other items, to fund subsidies for things like hearing aids, glasses and dental care. The reform would possibly allow the government to enforce or even negotiate lower drug prices, at least for Medicare.

We can likely expect a volatile stock market this autumn. It is possible that our sector can be especially hard hit, but attractive valuations should provide support. After all, considering the fact that more than half of the fund is invested in pharmaceuticals and biotechnology those companies are only partly dependent on sales to Medicare. We believe that price regulation of the entire US pharmaceutical market is unlikely. One scenario, involving lower prices for Medicare and increasing volumes that somewhat offset the loss of revenue, is possible and could offer our sector the revaluation we think it deserves.
