MONTHLY UPDATE

October brought strong quarterly reports and a better-than-expected outcome of the US budget negotiations. Despite some headwinds such as high energy prices, production bottlenecks and persistent inflationary pressures, investors appeared to be paying attention to continued solid demand in the global economy. After a shaky start to the fall, when many stock markets recorded their first declines for 2021, the mood improved in October.

Third-quarter earnings better than expected overall

Companies reported better-than-expected overall third-quarter profits, though many of them warned of the consequences of component shortages and high transportation costs. This was especially evident in the manufacturing industry, but even companies like Apple and Amazon reported earnings that were worse than expected.

Biden's budget deal on target

US President Biden's efforts to push through a budget deal appeared to reach the finish line, albeit in a heavily slimmed-down version. The original 3.5 trillion dollar framework was effectively cut in half following fierce opposition, not least from some Democratic senators. Among other measures, the proposed corporate tax increase was put on hold, as was a broader drug pricing reform. Divisions within the Democratic Party and President Biden's low poll numbers were the likely causes behind this compromise.

Inflation remained high

The continued surge in energy prices and other supply chain inputs kept inflation relatively high. Although both the US Federal Reserve and the European Central Bank announced that this should be of a transitory nature, long-term bond yields recorded gains during the month. Expectations of future interest rate hikes also changed, especially in the United States. Rate hikes as early as 2022 are now being signaled.

Glasgow climate summit

The climate summit in Glasgow, the first major summit since Paris in 2015, kicked off at the end of the month. Warnings from the UN's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and environmental movements about the continuing rise in emissions keeping pace with the economic recovery are now being weighed against an increasingly tangible global shortage of energy. The often perceived conflict between growth and climate change will therefore continue to be in focus.

Global sector indices rose

Risk appetite increased in October and global indices recorded an upturn, albeit with some differences due to exchange rate changes. Global sectors rose, with consumer discretionary and energy leading the pack while consumer staples and healthcare lagged behind. As for regions, Japan fell while other geographic markets rose, led by US markets.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased by 5.5 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The healthcare sector slightly underperformed the broader market during the month. All subsectors contributed positively to fund returns.

The fund's top contributors this month were UnitedHealth Group and Anthem. The worst contributors were Revance Therapeutics and Alnylam Pharmaceuticals.

UnitedHealth Group at the forefront

UnitedHealth Group is a fully integrated US healthcare insurance company.

In October, the company released a strong quarterly report that exceeded market expectations and provided strong guidance for the full year. The insurance segment's earnings came in slightly above expectations despite the increase in Covid-related care since it was more than compensated by a decrease in non-Covid care. Furthermore, the company's technology and services segment Optum continued to deliver strong profit growth.

With Optum, UnitedHealth not only gains a key competitive advantage but has an asset that, together with the scale and diversification of the insurance segment, uniquely positions the company in the value chain of the US healthcare system. As a strategic priority, the increased collaboration between the insurance segment and Optum gives the company every opportunity to remain at the forefront and be a central player in the US healthcare system.

Anthem's quarterly report sent share price up

US health insurance company Anthem released a strong quarterly report in October, providing a boost to its share price.

Prior to the earnings release, market expectations were low since Anthem's main patient population, commercially insured members, were less inclined to postpone non-Covid-related care during times of high pressure on the healthcare system due to Covid-19. Although this was true to some extent during the quarter, Anthem performed well enough in two of its business segments, government services and pharmacy benefit management, to offset the slightly weaker performance in its commercial insurance segment.

Anthem is the only public company licensed by the Blue Cross Blue Shield Association and thus has exclusive access to perhaps the single strongest brand in US health insurance. In recent years, the company has also expanded into governmental insurance markets and has developed a new business area, Diversified Business Group, to extend its offering in healthcare technology and pharmacy benefit management.

FDA rejected Revance Therapeutics' application

Revance Therapeutics is a US biotechnology company that has developed a proprietary formulation of botulinum toxin for both aesthetic and therapeutic indications.

During the period, the US FDA rejected the company's application for approval for treating glabellar (frown) lines, citing the company's flawed manufacturing process. The rejection came just three days after the company had assured shareholders that approval was expected before year-end. The share price therefore decreased sharply.

Alnylam Pharmaceuticals share price reacted negatively to the company's CEO succession

Alnylam is a US biotechnology company specialized in developing drugs based on RNA interference.

The phenomenon of RNA interference means that double-stranded RNA can regulate gene expression. Alnylam has successfully developed three drugs, all of which are based on the principle of regulating gene expression: Onpattro for the treatment of hereditary amyloidosis, Givlari for acute hepatic porphyria, and Oxlumo for primary hyperoxaluria type 1. The company has a broad, balanced research portfolio including an expansion of the use of existing products in addition to new drug candidates that address high cholesterol, hemophilia and high blood pressure, among other disorders.

When its third-quarter report was released, Alnylam announced that its CEO of 19 years intended to hand over the role to the company's COO. The succession appears well planned, but the share price reacted negatively to the announcement.

OUTLOOK

If we lift our gaze, we believe that the fund has reached an interesting inflection point. In many respects the pandemic clearly impacted the healthcare sector since regular care many times was canceled. As a result, patients were unable to see their doctors and get a diagnosis and treatments were delayed.

The healthcare industry benefits from the opening up of society

Pharmaceutical companies' clinical development was also delayed as the FDA experienced longer processing times and lockdowns had a negative impact on regular business operations. The healthcare industry is thus clearly part of the opening up of society – the areas of the economy that particularly benefit from a return to normality. The third quarter however, clearly saw negative effects resulting from the delta variant of Covid-19.

In parallel with the pandemic, the issue of drug prices has been in sharp focus during the (ongoing) negotiations for the massive "Build Back Better" budget, which was supposed to be funded in part by sharply reduced drug costs for Medicare, meaning care for senior citizens. This has resulted in a cautious attitude towards pharmaceutical and in particular biotechnology stocks.

The pandemic has passed its peak, and the pharmaceutical industry is doing well

We now seem to be emerging on the other side of the pandemic. It has passed its peak around the world, and many countries have already removed restrictions of various kinds. We notice that the wheels of the economy are spinning faster, even if supply and demand irregularities are creating temporary inflationary pressures. Interest rates are rising slightly as central banks prepare for tighter monetary policy.

At the same time, it appears that the pharmaceutical industry will do well in the major budget reconciliation now taking shape. In all likelihood we can expect some kind of price negotiation for the biggest drugs but the more moderate senators have managed to limit the scope significantly. Companies will thus have plenty of time to adapt and many companies will not be affected at all.

Interesting prospects for 2022

2022 could be a good year for the sector based on what we see at the time of writing. Admittedly, next fall is an election year in the United States, but the current administration is currently facing headwinds in the polls, which favors the status quo. Of course, the political temperature will rise after next summer, but with the pandemic behind us and an agreement on drug prices hopefully in place, we see interesting prospects for the fund. Globally, demand for healthcare will likely rebound across the board.

The fund's holdings ought to be well positioned to deliver increasing profits and thus support higher valuations.
