MONTHLY UPDATE

The war in Ukraine continued for a third month, now with the fighting concentrated to the eastern parts of the country. However, the focus for capital markets in May was on inflation and risks to the world economy. The major price increases on everything from grain to oil and metals since the war broke out, was clearly visible in inflation figures worldwide. This further increased the likelihood of fast, substantial interest rate increases.

After years of QE, the Fed is turning to QT

In addition to the increasingly sharpened tone from central banks regarding future interest rate hikes, the Fed is now initiating QT (quantitative tightening), which amplifies the effects of rising interest rates. This came after many years of the opposite, i.e., QE (quantitative easing). Consequently, concerns among investors that this would lead to lower economic activity or even recession grew, which in the long run could adversely affect the earning capacity of businesses. Despite this, the central banks seem determined to bring down the high level of inflation.

The EU agreed on a further sanctions package against Russia

Energy market developments were a subject of great interest. After weeks of negotiations, the EU managed to agree on a sixth sanctions package against Russia, including a phasing out of Russian oil imports. This, however, also included a number of exceptions, in particular for pipeline deliveries to Hungary. Partly in response to the sanctions, and partly because a few countries refused to pay for Russian gas in rubles, Gazprom ceased supplying gas to several countries in Europe, including Finland, the Netherlands and Denmark. Additionally, Germany was also affected when a supplier, Shell, was no longer allowed to buy Russian gas. So far this year, oil and gas prices have risen by about 55 and 135 percent respectively.

Signs of easing of restrictions in China

The extensive shutdowns in China, not least those in big cities and manufacturing centers, brought about another major disruption to the world economy. The reason for these massive shutdowns was the country's zero-tolerance towards Covid. As a consequence, the outlook for Chinese growth figures was successively reduced, and the already fragile supply chains were further burdened. However, towards the end of the month, signals emerged that the shutdowns would gradually be eased.

World index virtually unchanged in May

Thanks to a strong recovery at the end of the month, world indices only fell marginally in May despite the war, the sanctions, rising inflation and recession turmoil. However, this should be seen against the backdrop of this year's very weak start, especially for investors with US dollar as their base currency. The world index was thus virtually unchanged in May, although the differences between sectors and to some extent regions, remained significant: energy companies increased sharply and banks too noted gains. On the downside, once again, consumer discretionary and information technology were the sectors which decreased the most. In terms of the major stock exchanges, Tokyo and Hong Kong rose while the US, where the growth-dominated Nasdaq stock market weighs heavily, was down.

FUND PERFORMANCE

In May, the fund decreased by 4.5 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). Continued flows into value stocks benefited the large pharmaceutical companies as well as the US pharmaceutical distributors who both contributed positively to the fund. Concerns about continued high inflation and uncertainties around how well the central banks will be able to curb inflation without hampering growth too much, continued to put pressure on the share prices of companies with high valuations. The biotechnology sector saw a strong recovery after bottoming out at the beginning of the month, yet still impacted the fund negatively for the period. The month's best contributors for the fund were Biohaven Pharmaceutical and BioNTech. The worst contributors were lovance Biotherapeutics and Genmab.

Pfizer's bid lifted Biohaven Pharmaceutical

Biohaven is an American biotechnology company which has developed a new oral drug for migraines. Back in November 2021, Biohaven and Pfizer entered into an agreement to commercialize Nurtec in markets outside the United States. After a long period of speculation about a potential acquisition of Biohaven, Pfizer finally made a bid for the company. Pfizer's bid valued the company at $11.6 billion, which meant a bid premium of 69% compared to the closing price the day before. The fund's holding in Biohaven thus made a positive contribution to the return during the period.

BioNTech's share price reacted positively to strong quarterly report

BioNTech is a German biotechnology company focusing on immunology. The company has several different platforms for the development of vaccines and drugs against cancer and infectious diseases. BioNTech has one approved product, Comirnaty, a Covid-19 vaccine developed using the company's mRNA technology. The successes with Comirnaty have resulted in a very strong balance sheet which allows the company to finance its development projects in cancer and seasonal flu vaccine. The stock price reacted positively to the strong quarterly report for the first quarter and the holding contributed positively to the fund's return in May.

Perceptions of reduced revenue potential affected Iovance Biotherapeutics negatively lovance is an American biotechnology company developing a new technology for cell therapy that utilizes the body's own tumor-infiltrating lymphocytes (TIL). A TIL is a type of cell that has the purpose of identifying and actively destroying tumor cells. lovance has shown promising data in several tumor types with its product Lifileucel, including, among others, patients with metastatic melanoma (skin cancer) whose disease has progressed after treatment with immunotherapy. Ahead of this year's ASCO conference which takes place in early June, lovance presented data from a group of patients with advanced skin cancer who were significantly sicker than those included in earlier studies. This study therefore showed a lower response rate and a shorter duration of response compared to previous results. The stock fell sharply as investors worried that the revenue potential for Lifileucel had decreased.

The backlog of previous disputes affected Genmab negatively in May Genmab is a Danish biotechnology company with a focus on treating cancer. Most of the company's revenue comes from Darzalex, an antibody that binds to the protein CD38 which is found in high levels on the surface of myeloma cells (blood cancer). Darzalex activates the immune system which kills the cancer cells. Most of the rights to Darzalex are out-licensed to Johnson & Johnson. In April, the outcome of the arbitration between the companies regarding a dispute concerning the profit distribution for Darzalex was published. Despite the negative outcome for Genmab, in the form of lower royalty income from Darzalex in the future, there was no major market reaction until May when the stock price fell.

OUTLOOK

The very weak market culminated on 11 May which ought to be the bottom of the downturn in the sector. However, if the global environment develops negatively, for example through new shutdowns in China, further disruptions in the energy markets as a result of the war, or sharply increased interest rates to curb inflation, the decline could continue. However, we believe we could see a better stock market going forward, perhaps in the form of a so-called summer rally since we do not see the threats as being acute and much should already have been discounted in current share prices.

In our opinion, the level of uncertainty about how the autumn will develop is greater. The traditional pattern of a weak stock market leading up to the American mid-term election is likely, unless the world moves in a clearly positive direction. Healthcare is unlikely to be an exception since it is a politically sensitive sector.

However, valuations provide good support since the healthcare sector has been almost two P/E multiples below average in recent decades. We are therefore relatively optimistic regarding the outlook for next year. We believe that global growth should stabilize or even improve as bottlenecks in production and distribution are gradually addressed, as the tightening of monetary policy in the United States slows down, and economic growth should be able to grow roughly in line with its long-term potential. A so-called 'soft landing' would probably be ideal for our sector but, obviously, it is not a given.
