MONTHLY UPDATE

Happy New Year! January turned out to be the third consecutive month with positive stock market returns overall despite investors' initial hesitation. After the very strong finish in 2023, with November and December delivering bumper price increases, the new year however started off on a more apprehensive note. This was due not least to the push back from central bankers that market participants' expectations of near-term rate cuts were too optimistic. However, as the month progressed, incoming inflation numbers combined with the benign macro statistics overall supported the notion of a possible soft landing accompanied by successively lower rates.

Rates untouched, but with expectations of upcoming cuts

Even though the Federal Reserve and the European Central Bank held their respective rates unchanged, the messages they conveyed clearly pointed towards upcoming cuts. The question of timing remained, which might have pushed the expected dates a little bit into the future, but the dovish direction was clear.

Reporting season in full swing

The Q4 reporting season kicked off on a fairly positive note, with earnings in most sectors in line with or better than the forecasts. Operating margins overall held up well, although order intake and forward guidance in many instances indicated uncertainty regarding demand in 2024. Against the backdrop of investors' expectations of successively improved economic growth, these question marks were often given the benefit of the doubt.

No end in sight for wars in Gaza and Ukraine

The war in Gaza continued with no endgame in sight. Despite the hardline stance from Israeli prime minister Benjamin Netanyahu, both the US and the EU advocated a two-state solution as a prerequisite to end the fighting. Meanwhile, the conflict seemed on the cusp of spreading as Iran-backed militias lethally attacked US forces in Jordan while cargo ships in the Red Sea continued to be attacked. The former prompted president Biden to announce countermeasures in the region, while the latter caused shipping companies to redirect routes from the Suez Canal to around the Cape of Good Hope, a significant detour. Almost two years after Russia launched its full-scale invasion, the war in Ukraine continued albeit with neither side making any significant progress. Interest rather focused once more on Ukraines need for further western support, with negotiations being conducted both within the EU commission and with the Biden administration.

Continued difficulties for capital markets in China

The Chinese economy and its capital markets continued to be plagued by lackluster growth, falling foreign direct investments and poor stock market performance. The troubles in the real estate sector were again highlighted, this time by the bankruptcy of developer Evergrande. However, the Chinese authorities introduced several measures in order to prop up confidence in the financial markets.

World index up

The start of 2024 thus showed a positive follow-through on the strong performance seen towards the end of last year, and the world index rose in January. The Magnificent Seven, with Nvidia and Microsoft at the forefront, continued to dominate, contributing to most of the overall increase in the broader indices. Otherwise, apart from information technology, most sectors posted positive returns with healthcare being up with the leaders, while raw materials and utilities declined. Looking at the regions, Japan and the US outperformed Europe while Hong Kong continued to suffer from investor exodus.

FUND PERFORMANCE

In January, the fund increased by 5.7 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The month marked a strong start to the year, characterized by positive contributions from all sub-sectors. Notably, the fund's holdings in medical technology and pharmaceuticals contributed particularly strongly during the month. The fund had two announced acquisitions in January,

Johnson & Johnson announced its intention to acquire Ambrx Biopharma for USD 2 billion and the medical technology company, Boston Scientific, announced an agreement to acquire Axonics for close USD 4 billion. The best contributors were Shockwave and Eli Lilly. The worst contributors were Alignment Healthcare and Genmab.

Sentiment shift positively impacted Shockwave

Greater interest in the sector, increasing utilization trends and large medical technology companies being more vocal about the capital allocation environment heading into this year, all combined to impact sentiment for the medical technology sector positively during the first month of the year. Shockwave experienced particularly strong stock performance, driven by the shifting sentiment for the sector and some distinct comments regarding limited impact from prior authorization for specific procedures in the US.

Strong momentum for Eli Lilly and obesity

The demand for GLP1 drugs, including Lilly's Zepbound / Mounjaro, remained high as the launch progressed. In addition, the company outlined several highly anticipated health-outcome studies in weight-related conditions. Combined with the ramping up of drug production, progress in administration of injections, and increased clarity in payor discussions, the positive momentum of the GLP-1 launches for Lilly was carried forward.

Alignment fell in sympathy

Alignment Healthcare is a technology-enabled health insurance company with an innovative care model focused on the Medicare population. After two competitors flagged for worse-than-expected margins in the quarter, Alignment fell in sympathy. Higher-than-expected utilization coupled with regulatory changes is creating a perfect storm in the managed Medicare market.

Year started with volatility for Genmab

The company has an eventful year ahead with several important data readouts. Focus has been on both Hexabody-CD38, a next-gen antibody developed in myeloma indications, and the extent of Genmab's collaboration with partner Johnson & Johnson regarding the asset. However, uncertainties regarding data outcomes exist coupled with slightly weaker US sales for key products in the last quarter.

OUTLOOK

The healthcare sector had a tough 2023, partly as a result of the sector coping relatively well in 2022 when much else was struggling. The fund has seen a strong start to 2024 in absolute numbers and, moreover, the sector is once again doing slightly better than a general world index. The fund has developed strongly during the last three-month period, up over 20 percent in its base currency, the euro. It undeniably feels better, more hopeful and somewhat safer than for quite a while.

The key drivers behind the strong development in recent months have been several interacting factors: Firstly, a series of acquisitions in the fall and in the beginning of the year, secondly, an improved sentiment for biotech, supported by falling long-term interest rates and thirdly, a renewed interest in the sector after weak earnings in 2023. The year ahead has great potential to continue to perform well according both to our own forecasts and the market's profit forecasts for the sector.

Keeping an extra eye on the US election

We have to pinch ourselves in the arm. Good fundamentals with improved profit margins in a troubled world but, at the same time, with unknown factors impacting interest in the sector. For us, as sector investors, the American election will of course be of great interest. US elections always tend to affect our sector to some extent although probably less so this year. The economy, jobs, purchasing power, migration across the Mexican border and cultural issues in a broad sense will be subject of more attention. The pharmaceutical reform "IRA" will be implemented over the coming years and therefore will probably be less in focus, even though pharmaceutical prices as such are still high on many voters' list of important social problems. The financing of healthcare for the elderly (Medicare) and the poor (Medicaid) are central issues in a country with large budget deficits, but they will hardly become hot election issues this year. They are simply too complicated and do not motivate marginal voters to switch sides. Instead, politicians tend to promise more instead of less.

Prospects for a strong 2024

So, there are prospects for 2024 to be a strong year for the healthcare sector despite the high level of geopolitical uncertainty and numerous elections around the world. If 2024 turns out to be a good stock market year for healthcare, we may see the strongest developments at the end of the year. This is usually the case during American election years. However, at this point in time, we are a little more optimistic than that. The fundamentals are good, interest rates have peaked for now and the sector lagged in 2023, so - time for a recovery, we believe. Both the strong development in January and the fact that we have an all-time high for the S&P 500 statistically point to a high probability of a continued rise in the stock market, which should give the healthcare sector the conditions in which to do well.
