MONTHLY UPDATE

Overall, 2021 started off on a relatively calm note, with only minor changes in the world index. But what at first glance appeared to be a quiet month concealed plenty of drama beneath the surface. In reality, January was marked by several unexpected events that led to wild fluctuations, rising volatility and a weak end to the month.

Trump's presidency ended in turmoil

In the United States, two notable events kicked off the year. The first was that Donald Trump's presidency ended in uproar. After denying his defeat since the November elections, his supporters stormed the Capitol on 6 January. Trump's speech to his followers shortly before they rioted was seen as an act of sedition, and he now faces impeachment once again.

The second notable event occurred when the run-off elections for Georgia's Senate seats ended in a win for two Democrats. This resulted in a so-called blue sweep whereby Democrats now control both the House of Representatives and the Senate (albeit with the slimmest possible majority). Investors will thus have to brace themselves for measures which might, on the one hand, aim to increase stimulus measures, while, on the other hand, they might usher in higher taxes and new regulations.

Retail investors forced short-sellers to cover their positions

Completely outside the realm of politics, retail investors played an unexpectedly outsized role in January, especially in the United States. Since the spring of 2020, retail investors have come to account for an increasingly large share of market trading, and platforms like Robinhood have gained several million new users. On a forum for these investors, a call came during the month to buy shares that hedge funds were shorting, most notably shares in the video game retailer GameStop and the cinema chain AMC.

Thereafter, the prices of these two stocks shot up by slightly over 1,600 and 500 percent, respectively, forcing short-sellers to cover their positions. This in turn compelled the hedge funds to sell off their long positions to finance the buybacks, which naturally affected the markets as a whole.

Slow vaccination process in Europe

In Europe, vaccines and mutations of the coronavirus were at the center of interest. However, the European vaccination process has been sluggish, and the percentage of the EU population that has received one or two doses to date is far lower than in Israel, the UK and the US. As a result of the slow approval process and a dispute with AstraZeneca over vaccine availability, EU commission president Ursula von der Leyen decided at the end of January to ban the export of vaccines outside the EU. This led to widespread protests.

Hong Kong and Nasdaq topped the exchanges in January

The world index remained virtually unchanged in January, with marginal differences depending on the currency. Energy and healthcare companies recorded gains, while consumer staples and industrial companies fell back. As for the bigger exchanges, Hong Kong and Nasdaq were the top performers by far, while Europe recorded some decline.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased 1.3 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The medical technology, biotechnology and pharmaceutical subsectors contributed positively while services detracted from performance in January following a broad decline in the share prices of health insurance companies. The fund's best contributors for the month were Teladoc Health and Eli Lilly. The worst contributors were Apellis Pharmaceuticals and BioMarin Pharmaceutical.

Teladoc Health stock rose thanks to virtual care offering

Teladoc Health is the largest independent provider of telehealth and telemedicine in the US and offers virtual care with a wide range of services across much of the healthcare chain. The company has benefited from its position as a market leader in telehealth and the widespread transition to virtual care during the pandemic. Through its merger with Livongo last year, the company strengthened its market position in chronic diseases, opening up greater market potential and significant sales synergies.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the changes we have seen in how care is delivered during the pandemic, including the fundamental role of digital health care, are here to stay. Teladoc's share price has performed strongly as this insight has taken hold among investors.

Eli Lilly has one of the best growth profiles

Eli Lilly is a US pharmaceutical company which boasts one of the best growth profiles in recent years thanks to a number of new launches. In January, the company presented surprisingly good phase 2 data for its drug candidate donanemab, an antibody that has been developed to treat early stages of Alzheimer's by breaking down amyloid plaques in the brain. However, the data may be considered preliminary as this was an early trial involving only 266 patients.

A more comprehensive phase 2 trial involving more patients is underway where data are expected during the first half of 2023. Positive results from this trial could potentially be used to seek regulatory approval.

Apellis Pharmaceuticals stock fell slightly in anticipation of clinical results

Apellis is a US biotechnology company focused on developing new drugs within the complement system, a central part of the adaptive immune system. The company's leading drug candidate, pegcetacoplan, is being evaluated in several different indications, including not only non-malignant haematological diseases but also kidney and eye diseases.

Following last year's stellar share price performance, when the stock surged nearly 80 percent, it fell back slightly at the start of the new year ahead of results from the company's ongoing clinical trials.

BioMarin Pharmaceutical's approval deferred

BioMarin Pharmaceutical is a US biotechnology company focusing on rare diseases. The company has also been a pioneer in the field of gene therapy and has developed Roctavian, a gene therapy for the treatment of haemophilia A. By adding the gene responsible for the expression of factor VIII protein (which is an important part of the coagulation cascade that haemophilia patients lack), the goal is for patients to produce factor VIII themselves after treatment with Roctavian.

However, in August 2020, the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) requested longer follow-up data before considering approval. Had the interim data presented by the company in January been sufficiently convincing, the FDA could have shortened the lead time for approval. The launch now looks likely to be delayed by two years, until the end of 2022.

OUTLOOK

The even outcome of the US Senate elections means that any political reforms will require a completely united Democratic party. Furthermore, each reform bill will, in turn, need to be combined with total funding for increases in spending in line with the current budget (under the reconciliation procedure) or a legislative proposal that can be approved by 10 Republican senators in addition to 50 unified Democratic senators.

The even party lines in the US Senate could favor our sector

The lack of a convincing majority is a relatively favorable situation for the healthcare sector, as both alternatives require a high degree of political agreement. We, therefore, believe that the healthcare sector will face a reasonably stable political environment up until the next elections, which are congressional elections in autumn 2022. Our hopes are high for upcoming reform proposals in the healthcare sector to be both moderate and relatively uncontroversial for a broader investor collective.

Nonetheless, the question of drug prices can cause concern, as it will be initially difficult to distinguish between a proposed bill and what can actually be passed in both chambers of Congress. Although the proposals may be perceived as being quite far-reaching and radical, they might in fact have a low probability of being passed without substantial changes. Further legal strategies under existing legislation and the president's executive power certainly cannot be ruled out, but they are not straightforward either.

Our sector supported by the low valuations of traditional companies

The low valuations of the major traditional companies in our sector could provide good support in the unlikely event that economic growth is lower than currently anticipated. However, the market has so far this year shown more interest in smaller companies, as these promise higher growth and also represent potential acquisition targets.

Although cyclical equities might outperform our sector, we should nevertheless have a good chance of reaching our return target of 12 percent. The sentiment for our companies and subsectors is relatively good, and even better than our assessment prior to the US elections when political uncertainty was at its highest. We look forward to the 2021 investment year ahead.
