MONTHLY UPDATE

A strong month with a weak finish and major differences between sectors – this about sums up February. While January was characterized by political turmoil in the US and drama in the stock market as retail investors attacked hedge fund short selling, February was marked by both optimism for the future and rising interest rates and commodity prices.

Investors' concerns about inflation caused rise in long-term interest rates

Initially, investors reacted positively to the good quarterly reports and the potential of large stimulus packages in the US. Gradually, however, concerns grew about what the improved economic outlook might mean for inflation in the long run, and long-term interest rates rose sharply during the month. For example, a US 10-year bond went from 1.15 percent to 1.40 percent during the month. Although this should be compared with the rate of approximately 2 percent that prevailed before the pandemic broke out, the rapid rise in interest rates spooked investors.

Oil prices rose, causing sectors to swap their positions

Meanwhile, oil prices continued to rise and were up 18 percent in February, hitting a one-year high. This was partly due to better demand forecasts and lower inventories, and partly to unexpectedly good discipline from OPEC+, where Saudi Arabia unilaterally held production back by one million barrels per day.

All this led to a reversal in how sectors performed. Growth companies, whose valuations had earlier risen in line with falling interest rates, performed relatively weakly during the month – while sectors such as oil and banks, after years of weak price growth, were by far the biggest winners of the month.

The pandemic continued – but no longer seems to worry investors

The spread of Covid-19 continued in February, albeit with variations between countries. In the UK, for example, the rate of spread decreased significantly, while several countries in the rest of Europe reported increases. The pace of vaccination programs also continued to differ, with the EU standing out negatively compared to countries such as Israel, the US and the UK.

However, investors do not seem too concerned with the pandemic. Most are now looking forward to the second half of the year, with major parts of the population hopefully vaccinated and an increase in herd immunity.

A good month for risk assets

Overall, February was a reasonably good month for risk assets and the world index rose, with some differences depending on the currency. As stated earlier, the energy sector and banks reported major gains while consumer staples and healthcare companies fell back. All major stock markets performed positively during the month, with Tokyo and the S&P 500 leading the way, while Europe and Nasdaq showed lower, but still positive returns.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased 0.6 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The pharmaceutical and biotechnology subsectors contributed positively to the fund's performance in February, while medical technology and services contributed negatively. Development of the various subsectors was in line with the general market trends, with high-growth small- and mid-caps generating the highest returns at the beginning of the month. However, at the end of the period, these same companies plummeted the most due to increased concern over rising inflation.

The fund's best contributors for the month were Horizon Therapeutics and Nektar Therapeutics. The worst contributors were Teladoc Health and Genmab.

Horizon Therapeutics' share price rose after positive interim report and good growth outlook

Horizon Therapeutics is a US pharmaceutical company specializing in rare diseases. The company already sells Krystexxa for the treatment of refractory gout, and last year launched Tepezza, an IGF-1R inhibitor for the treatment of thyroid eye disease caused by excessive levels of thyroid hormones.

Both products have a strong growth profile driven by significant medical need and few treatment options. The interim report for the fourth quarter beat market expectations as well as the growth outlook for 2021, causing the share price to react positively in February.

New partnership caused Nektar Therapeutics' stock to rise

Nektar Therapeutics has a unique platform based on pegylation of pharmaceutical substances. The company is primarily known for its research portfolio in immunology, where they are working on developing effective combination therapies. They also have drug candidates under development for the treatment of autoimmune diseases.

In February, Nektar began a new clinical study to evaluate its IL-2 analogue bimepegaldesleukin in combination with Keytruda (Merck's PD-1 antibody) for the treatment of head and neck tumors. A third party, SFJ Pharmaceuticals, will fund the study in exchange for future royalty payments. The new partnership re-generated interest in the stock, and resulted in one of the largest contributions to the fund's performance during the month.

Teladoc Health's stock fell during the month but was still up year to date

Teladoc Health is the largest independent provider of virtual care in the US and offers a wide range of services across the healthcare chain. The company has benefited from its position as market leader in the widespread transition to virtual care during the pandemic. It is becoming increasingly clear that the changes we have seen over the past year in how care is executed, including the fundamental role of digital care, are here to stay.

Thanks to increased utilization of the company's services, they expect a doubling of sales in the current year, despite a limited increase in the number of subscribers. In February, the share price reacted negatively to the decreased rate of new subscriptions but, nevertheless, the stock is up 11 percent since the beginning of the year.

The market reacted negatively to Genmab's cautious forecast

Genmab is a Danish biotech company specializing in cancer therapies. The company's key asset is the approved drug Darzalex for the treatment of multiple myeloma, which they market together with their global partner Johnson & Johnson.

Ongoing litigation between Genmab and Johnson & Johnson concerning the profit sharing of a new formulation of Darzalex led Genmab to issue a cautious forecast in its interim report at the end of February. The forecast was below market expectations, and the share price reacted negatively to the sales prospects which the company provided.

OUTLOOK

The healthcare sector's tentative start to the year was in line with our expectations that other more cyclical sectors would lead the stock market upwards. The fund's continued positive development is based on our exposure to growth shares. Consequently, we have now chosen to gradually supplement the portfolio with healthcare IT companies and also some new biotechnology holdings. At the same time, we have increased the holdings of large global companies with long-term growth potential.

When society returns to normal, the fund will benefit

The consequence of these two simultaneous measures is that net exposure has risen slightly. This is in line with our positive view of the fund's prospects in a rising stock market. Healthcare companies will benefit significantly when life goes back to normal, as this means that specialized healthcare will grow back to where it were and then beyond. We hope to reap the benefits of this in the form of rising share prices.
