MONTHLY UPDATE

The first half of 2021 was the best first half-year for the stock exchanges since the financial crisis. Like May, June was also a month without earnings reports or other major corporate news. Instead, the market was mainly affected by economic trends in general and inflation in particular.

Growth companies were the winners when long-term yields fell

Long-term bond yields fell, despite multiple signs of an increasingly strong recovery in global economies and the Federal Reserve's indications of yield rises as early as 2023. Lower bond yields provided a boost for growth companies, while the cycle-sensitive value companies fell back. The logic behind this development was that the economic growth rate was peaking and yields were troughing. June therefore provided growth companies with a taste of revenge. The Nasdaq was by far the best stock exchange, with modest growth across the rest of stock markets worldwide.

All quiet on the political front, an oil deficit and little impact from the pandemic

It was mostly pretty quiet on the political front in June. However, in the USA, President Biden pushed through a bipartisan agreement on an infrastructure package worth USD 1,200 billion called Build Back Better. In China, the communist party celebrated its centenary, and President Xi warned the world not to meddle in the issue of Taiwan.

The price of oil continued to rise during the month. It has now increased by nearly 50 percent this year. Higher demand, together with an increasingly disciplined OPEC+, has turned the supply balance on the market into a deficit. Despite discussions over a new nuclear power deal with Iran, which could lead to higher supply of oil, the deficit is not expected to change appreciably in the immediate future.

The pandemic continued to hit the headlines. The delta mutation, or Indian variant, led in part to the UK postponing the end of its restrictions by a month. The vaccination rate was increasing at the same time, with the result that investors largely chose to ignore the risk of another new wave of infection that could impact the economy.

June was therefore a strong month after the more tentative performance in May. The world index rose, albeit with continued significant differences between currencies. Information technology and energy enjoyed the strongest performances, while banks and commodity companies fell. Stock exchanges in the US were up, while increases in Europe and Japan were much less marked.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased by 5.0 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). All subsectors made positive contributions to fund performance in June, the biggest contributions coming from biotechnology and pharmaceuticals. The standout news item during the month was the controversial decision by the FDA to approve Biogen's new drug for the treatment of Alzheimer's disease. This decision contributed to a good return for the biotechnology sector and, in particular, the companies developing Alzheimer's drugs. Questions were, however, raised about how the treatment would be financed, which resulted in a poorer return for health insurers. In the US alone, there are several million patients with Alzheimer's.

The fund's best contributors for the month were Roche and Eli Lilly. The worst contributors were MacroGenics and Cigna.

Roche and Eli Lilly were winners when the FDA approved treatment for Alzheimer's

The FDA's decision to approve Biogen's Aduhelm, based on a biomarker that measures the reduction in beta-amyloid plaques, opened the door for several other companies researching in the same field to accelerate their approval processes. One of them is Roche, which has developed gantenerumab, an antibody designed like Aduhelm to reduce plaque formation in the brain. Another is Eli Lilly, which has developed donanemab, a drug with a similar action mechanism. The fund has exposure to the above companies.

In the US alone, there are over six million patients with Alzheimer's disease. Those who have reached severe stages of the disease are not deemed suitable for treatment with antibodies that reduce beta-amyloid plaque. However, patients who are in the early stages of the disease number around two million. The list price of the drug is USD 56,000 per patient per annum, which would mean a potential market worth over USD 100 billion per annum in the US alone. This naturally offers great potential for all companies researching in this field, and consequently the share prices of Roche and Eli Lilly both benefitted.

MacroGenics – question mark over side effects

MacroGenics is a US research company focusing on developing innovative cancer drugs based on its antibody technology platform. The company has attracted much attention for its early research portfolio, especially for MGC018, an antibody-drug conjugate targeting protein B7-H3, which is expressed on several solid tumors.

At the annual ASCO cancer conference in June, MacroGenics presented updated data from a phase I study on metastatic prostate cancer. Efficacy data from the study more or less confirmed earlier knowledge, but new data on side effects emerged, raising a number of question marks among investors and causing the share price to react negatively. In our opinion, however, the side effects were to be expected with the technology applied. Further clinical data in other tumor types and from a larger patient base is needed to establish whether this will be an approvable drug.

Cigna affected by uncertainty about the financing of Alzheimer's treatment

Cigna is a US multinational health insurer. Cigna suffered in June when growth shares generally increased to the detriment of value shares. Moreover, insurance companies were affected by uncertainty about the financial consequences of Biogen's approved drug Aduhelm. The majority of Alzheimer's patients are insured under Medicare, meaning that, initially, the cost of Aduhelm will most likely be directly reimbursed by the CMS (i.e. the federal government). Over time, insurance companies will develop new control procedures for this new treatment option.

Cigna confirmed in June that healthcare use in the second quarter was in line with the company's previous expectations. Covid-related healthcare decreased, compensating for the increase in non-Covid-related healthcare, compared with the first quarter. Cigna also stated that they felt highly confident in their ability to deliver growth in earnings per share at the company's long-term target of 10-13 percent per annum or higher in the longer term. We do not believe that this forecast is reflected in Cigna's current valuation.

OUTLOOK

A strong end to the first half-year compensated for the slower performance in the spring. Large global groups with profits and dividends tended to do slightly better than pure R&D companies. This alternating between different types of companies is nothing new.

We predict a bright future for large pharmaceutical companies

The interest rate unease in the spring caused many investors to plan for a possible change of course in good time and to head for calmer waters. At the same time, several central banks stated emphatically that the inflationary trends we were seeing were only temporary and that phasing out the current ultra-generous monetary policy was still some way off in the future. Sectoral rotation was rendered slightly more conservative by the fact that many people consider the positive profit revisions will approach a peak during the second half of the year. In turn, this will provide scope for the more traditional growth companies in 2022. We are already seeing signs of this, as the large pharmaceutical companies are no longer lagging behind.

We held a lower proportion of biotechnology stock in the first half of the year than for a long time. This was a wise decision considering that the smaller biotechnology companies performed relatively poorly. The larger biotechnology companies are similar in some ways to pharmaceutical companies and thus performed better. However, they have performed so weakly for several years that this underweight has been good in the longer term.

The issue of drug reform still seems to be very difficult for politicians to manage. The complexity is constantly increasing as many other issues need to be handled at the same time in the next budget reconciliation. We still believe that the risk of a major reform, which would be very negative for the industry, is moderate and manageable for the fund. We are following this issue very closely and with great interest.

Looking ahead to the earnings season

We are looking forward to the earnings season. As we indicated in previous monthly reports, many of our companies are benefitting as the economy returns to normal. From a historical perspective, pharmaceutical companies have low P/E ratios, and we are able to identify good investment opportunities in all our subsectors. We must remain disciplined and invest in companies that are able to cope with a more conservative investment climate in 2022.
