MONTHLY UPDATE

The two questions that were in sharp focus during July were 'Is growth now slowing?' and 'Is this as good as it will get?'. And despite solid reports overall for the second quarter, global market indices struggled to rise more than marginally. While this should be viewed in light of the historically strong first half-year, the lukewarm reactions to healthy corporate earnings reflected investor concerns about future earnings growth. The spread of the delta variant of the virus contributed to the lukewarm reactions.

A period marked by wavering faith in the future

Although the trend of rejecting equities in cyclical sectors in favor of large growth companies remained evident in July, even these companies' earnings reports were received with some skepticism towards the end of the month. One justifiable reason why investors turned their backs on cyclical companies was the probability of peak growth, while the negative price reactions to technology companies rather reflected concerns that even digital business models could not sustain such high sales growth.

Doubts over future growth were also evident in the bond market. Long-term interest rates continued to fall in July despite persistent inflationary pressures in the wake of the opening up of economies. The US Federal Reserve's view that the price increases were transitory seemed to influence investors' attitude to interest-bearing investments.

Interest in authoritarian Chinese administration overshadowed dramatic energy market

Developments in the energy market in July were dramatic. Despite some discord over future production quotas, the OPEC+ countries showed strong determination to slowly, but surely, supply the world with oil. Consequently, the market is likely to remain tight, resulting in high energy prices.

The geographic market that attracted the most interest during the month was, however, China. Several crackdowns on various business segments, not least for-profit education companies, reinforced the impression of an increasingly authoritarian Chinese administration.

United States and Europe rose while Hong Kong and Japan fell

Overall, global indices recorded a slight uptick. Healthcare and information technology outperformed the broader market, while energy and banks were significantly weaker. In terms of regions, the United States and Europe rose while Hong Kong and Japan fell in what was a month of 'wait and see'.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund decreased by 1.4 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The healthcare sector performed slightly better than the market in general during the month, albeit with the main emphasis being on large companies mainly within the medical technology and pharmaceutical subsectors. The fund's focus on small and medium-sized companies, especially in biotechnology, weighed on the fund's performance in July.

The fund's best contributors this month were Biohaven Pharmaceuticals and Horizon Therapeutics. The worst contributors were Novocure and FibroGen.

Biohaven Pharmaceuticals' share price rose following increased sales

Biohaven Pharmaceuticals is a US biotechnology company focusing on neurological and psychiatric disorders. Nurtec is a so called calcitonin gene-related peptide (CGRP) inhibitor in tablet form that is approved for the treatment of migraines at an acute stage and also, more recently, as a preventive migraine treatment. Nurtec was launched in March last year, in the midst of the initial Covid-19 outbreak. Despite the challenges of reaching doctors and patients with the new treatment during the pandemic, Nurtec was received surprisingly well thanks in part to a successful launch with generous volumes of free samples. As the product has become established on the market, the company has been able to increase revenue per unit by sampling less.

In July, the company announced that second-quarter sales would be significantly higher than market expectations, sending the share price up.

Horizon Therapeutics' healthy outlook boosted the share price

Horizon Therapeutics is a US pharmaceutical company specializing in rare diseases. The company already sells Krystexxa for the treatment of refractory gout, and last year launched Tepezza, an IGF-1R inhibitor for the treatment of thyroid eye disease caused by excessive levels of thyroid hormones. Both products have a strong growth profile driven by significant medical needs and few alternative therapies. Tepezza has quickly become the company's largest source of revenue.

Following several quarters of limited production capacity, sales are expected to increase sharply going forward.

Independent market research shows that the overall need for Tepezza remains high, and not just for the patients who had to interrupt their treatment due to the drug shortage. In addition, new patients were diagnosed during the past year who are still waiting to begin treatment.

These combined developments bolstered the share price during the month.

Inconclusive phase 2 study sent Novocure's share price down

Novocure is a US medical device company that has developed a novel therapy to treat cancer. The therapy uses electric tumor-treating fields (TTF) tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumor growth. The company's technology has already been approved for the treatment of glioblastoma and mesothelioma, two niche indications.

In order to broaden the potential for its technology, the company is conducting clinical trials in several other tumor types. Early in the month, Novocure presented preliminary data from a phase 2 study in liver cancer. Its share price reacted negatively because the response rate did not reach the level demonstrated previously by the company in this tumor type. Furthermore, its quarterly report again reminded the market of the need to expand the areas of application for the company's technology. Overall, the stock fell 31 percent in July.

Negative response from FDA caused FibroGen's share price to fall

FibroGen is a US biotechnology company. The company's drug candidate roxadustat is an oral treatment for anemia that shows promise for replacing treatment using recombinant erythropoietin in patients with chronic kidney disease. Roxadustat is approved in China where it is marketed by AstraZeneca, but the approval process in the United States has been fraught with several setbacks that have caused severe delays.

In July, an advisory committee of the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) voted against approval, citing the likely increased risk of side effects. As a result of the committee's decision, it is highly uncertain if the product will be authorized for the US market. The share price fell sharply following the announcement from the FDA.

OUTLOOK

The fund performed rather weakly in July as a result of its many holdings in small and medium-sized companies, especially in biotechnology and in companies with no profits. We think there were two main reasons for this.

Small companies were overshadowed by profit expectations for big companies

Firstly, small companies in general fared badly. This, we believe, was mostly a consequence of the focus on how much the big companies would beat earnings expectations as economies opened up. Furthermore, large corporations release their interim reports in July, while smaller companies tend to report in August. In addition, small companies' reports are rarely what drives their stocks, as clinical news is usually reported in other contexts. Small companies were thus sidelined.

Uncertainty over US price regulation impacted share prices

Secondly, uncertainty regarding the question of drug pricing is growing in the United States. This is creating extra worries for the smallest companies who are relying on the practice of free pricing. The market views the issue of potential future price regulation as a considerable uncertainty, so the willingness to fund companies' product development is likely to decrease – something that impacts share prices relatively quickly.

Sooner or later this fall, we can probably expect a proposal addressing drug pricing in the United States, since costs for pharmaceuticals has two politically significant aspects. First of all, it is an important issue in itself for many American voters as they often incur high out of pocket expenses at the pharmacy, and secondly, it represents an opportunity for politicians to finance new reforms in areas such as Medicare to also include things like dental care, eyeglasses and hearing aids.

Uncertainty is a hassle for managers – but we are maintaining a long-term view Global markets are moving, it seems, towards increased uncertainty and with it, rising volatility. This puts fund managers in quite a predicament. On the one hand, pharmaceutical and biotechnology valuations are, in some respects, close to record lows relative to the market as a whole. On the other hand, the uncertainty will probably be greatest in October–November, when the final budget reconciliation bill is expected. Thus, remaining disciplined, and not buying too much during any corrections, is key.

At the same time, we are maintaining our long-term perspective and believe that the fall promises to be a very interesting time to buy into these types of companies, which will then hopefully experience many years of a more predictable macro environment. However, the fund continues to have a not-insignificant portion of its capital in companies in other subsectors that are not directly linked to the drug pricing issue. Even if they often have significantly higher valuation, many of them are performing rather well.
