Monthly update

On the heels of October, a month that proved to be the single worst trading month for several years, world markets showed signs of stabilization in November. Eventually world indices measured in euros closed one percent up, but with plenty of ups and downs during the month. An initial spike quickly transformed into a new downturn, ultimately leading to a rebound. At the heart of the action were giant technology stocks, and the month's strong finish was largely due to the sector's broad gains during the month's final week. As a region, China stood out in a positive sense and was by far the top market in November. Europe, however, continued to show weak performance with a slight decline.

As so often earlier this year, worries over macro factors troubled investors this month too, including concerns over trade conflicts, interest rate hikes in the United States and possible political complications in Europe which could lead to worsening economic development. A sharp fall in the price of oil also fueled this concern.

One of the key events this period was the G20 summit in Buenos Aires at the turn of the month from November to December. Expectations for the summit were low as doubts grew over the possibility of a trade truce between the United States and China, but also regarding the sideline meeting between Russia and Saudi Arabia on cutting production to stabilize oil prices. This dampened market sentiment. However, both in terms of the trade agreement and the sideline meeting, surprisingly positive results were achieved, even if the markets during the first few days of December have been finding it tricky to assess how much progress was actually made.

Something that increased risk willingness, on the other hand, came at the end of the month from the US Federal Reserve, which stated that the benchmark interest rate was now approaching a neutral level. This was interpreted to mean that there would be fewer rate hikes than previously feared. One reason for the market jitters in October stemmed from statements made by Fed chairman Jerome Powell who set off worries that monetary policy would be tighter than investors had expected.

Overall the world index increased 1.2 percent in November, measured in euros. Performance by the various sectors was mixed, with healthcare companies and utilities at the head of the pack while energy companies and information technology were at the bottom.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund rose 5 percent measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR) and 4.5 percent measured in its RC1 class (SEK).

November was marked by gains in all subsectors (medtech, services, pharma and biotech). The broad healthcare index MSCI HC rose 5.2 percent measured in euros. The biotech index NBI rose 4.6 percent, with smaller biotech companies slightly underperforming larger ones.

The month's best contributors to the fund were Exelixis and Alexion Pharmaceuticals. The worst contributors were Diplomat Pharmacy and Aerie Pharmaceuticals.

Exelixis is a US biotechnology company specializing in cancer therapies. Its drug Cabometyx is approved for first-line and second-line treatment of renal cell carcinoma (RCC). In November, the company's partner Ipsen received additional approval for Cabometyx to be used on the European market for the treatment of hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC). This news, together with an interim report showing strong sales growth, contributed to the company's strong share price performance in November.

Alexion is a US biotechnology company specializing in rare diseases. The company's flagship product, Soliris, is approved for the treatment of patients with severe chronic diseases, including so-called paroxysmal nocturnal hemoglobinuria (PNH), atypical hemolytic uremic syndrome (aHUS) and, most recently, generalized myasthenia gravis (gMG). The stock fell sharply in October as a result of concerns about potential new competition. However, it recovered ahead of the expected approval of ALXN1210, the follow-up to Soliris, due in the first quarter of 2019.

Diplomat is the largest independent US pharmacy chain which focuses on specialty medicines, such as those for treating cancer. The company also operates a pharmacy benefit manager (PBM) business that offers health insurance providers with the services needed for procuring and managing the use of drugs. The company's interim report for the third quarter was disappointing, mainly due to the company's lower outlook for the full year. In addition, the stock market perceived the ongoing contract negotiations ahead of next year as a sign of increased uncertainty. This explained the plunging share price in November.

Aerie Pharmaceuticals is a US pharmaceutical company specializing in eye diseases. The company has developed the drug Rhopressa for the treatment of intraocular pressure in glaucoma. The drug was launched on the US market in the second quarter of 2018. The initial reaction to the launch has been positive, but the market doubts that the company can achieve its sales forecasts for the full year 2018. This has put pressure on its share price. The company has another significant product in the same clinical area that is expected to receive approval and be launched early next year.

OUTLOOK

Hopefully, we have now left most of this fall's stock market volatility behind us, assuming that the trade discussions between the United States and China seriously get underway and that the UK does not end up in a situation with a clearly higher risk of a hard Brexit. We therefore see potential for a continued upswing for the fund after the dips this fall, but the weaker economic outlook may delay it somewhat. The main point, however, is that prospects for the sector remain positive. The US government's so-called blueprint intends to set a precedent for the reforms that the pharmaceutical sector is likely to face. In our assessment, this blueprint is for the most part discounted and accepted by the market.

The global market for pharmaceuticals should, we believe, be able to grow 5-6% in the coming year, unless a significant slowdown in the global economy impacts the market negatively. It would appear that the industry is facing a decent 2019. A P/E expansion for the sector is possible, but it depends on the outlook for the global economy not becoming too uncertain. Large companies are well positioned to experience positive performance, while shares in small and medium-sized companies would require an increased level of risk appetite to extend their gains beyond those we have seen in recent years. The valuations are not challenging, neither for any of the size segments nor the pharmaceutical, biotechnology and service subsectors.
