Monthly update

Ambivalence continues to characterize the world's stock markets. This is how we can sum up performance in the last few months. A strong April that saw share prices bolstered by good quarterly reports was followed by an extremely weak May when news feeds were entirely dominated by the trade conflict between the United States and China, as well as by US moves against Mexico at the end of the month. June then turned out to be a good trading month as the United States shelved its tariff plans for Mexico, as the prospect of renewed negotiations with China gradually strengthened ahead of the G20 meeting in Osaka and, not least, as hopes rose for an impending interest rate cut from the US Federal Reserve.

However, the security situation in the Middle East deteriorated in June when two tankers were attacked near the Strait of Hormuz and a US drone was shot down by Iran. The United States refrained from a military response, and instead introduced new sanctions against leading figures in the Iranian regime. The price of oil rose during the month following the news, and also as a result of the production restrictions agreed on by Russia and Saudi Arabia at the end of June.

A good month ended in a positive spirit, with the confirmation that presidents Trump and Xi would meet in Osaka and the subsequent announcement that the US and China would resume trade negotiations. In addition, President Trump made a surprising visit to Korea where he, as the first incumbent US president, crossed the border into North Korea for a brief meeting with chairman Kim Jong-Un.

The overall world index, measured in euros, rose 4.5 percent in June. All sectors noted gains, with raw materials and information technology leading the pack, while consumer goods and utilities performed relatively poorly. All regions rose, with Europe in the lead followed by the United States and Japan.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased by 10.1 percent in June, measured in the fund's main class IC1 (EUR), and increased by 9.6 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). Measured in euros, a broad healthcare index (MSCI HC) increased by 4.9 percent.

The fund's best contributors were Array BioPharma and Mirati Therapeutics. The worst contributors were Aerie Pharmaceuticals and MacroGenics.

Two of the fund's holdings were subject to takeover bids during the month, and one, Array BioPharma, proved to be one of the month's best contributors. Array is a US biotechnology company specializing in cancer drug development. At the major cancer conference ASCO earlier in the month, the company presented highly positive data for its Braftovi/Mektovi combination therapy for the treatment of melanoma tumors with BRAF mutations. A few weeks later, Pfizer made a bid worth 11.4 billion dollars for the company, which meant a premium of 62 percent.

Mirati Therapeutics is a US biotechnology company that develops targeted cancer therapies. The company's development project which focus on a critical component of cell proliferation control, KRAS, attracted great interest during the period. Historically, the target protein KRAS has been considered almost impossible to use for drug development, but it now seems as if both Mirati and Amgen have succeeded. The reason behind the sharp price gains in June, upwards of 50 percent, was the highly promising – albeit quite early – Phase 1 data that Amgen presented early in the month at ASCO. Expectations are now growing for the Phase 1 data that Mirati will present later this autumn.

Aerie Pharmaceuticals is a US pharmaceutical company specializing in eye diseases. Within a short time, the company has launched two drugs that offer an innovative method for treating intraocular pressure in glaucoma (elevated pressure in the eye). Rhopressa contains an active substance that can be combined with traditional eye drops based on prostaglandin analogues. Rocklatan is a ready-to-use combination of Rhopressa and latanoprost (a generic prostaglandin analogue). The two products allow for tailored treatment of each individual patient's intraocular pressure. However, investor concerns over second-quarter sales trends put pressure on share price performance in June.

MacroGenics is a US biotechnology company specializing in cancer and advanced antibody technologies. In the company's most advanced development project, margetuximab is being developed for the treatment of HER2-positive breast cancer. The ongoing Phase 3 SOPHIA study compares margetuximab with the standard treatment trastuzumab, both in combination with chemotherapy. The SOPHIA study will form the basis for the registration application that the company will submit to the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) later this year. Assessing the improved effectiveness of margetuximab compared with the standard treatment of these patients simply requires a longer follow-up. Uncertainty over the extent of the improvement caused weak share price performance during the month of June.

OUTLOOK

The rally in June came as no surprise. April was unreasonably weak, and was due largely to excessive fears related to Medicare For All discussions. Also the market overall was subdued in the spring due to trade war concerns, something that probably would have had negligible direct effects on the healthcare sector.

We believe that the outlook for the summer remains positive, albeit with somewhat lower potential for the fund to climb after its remarkable performance in June. However, we see opportunities that are significantly greater than the threats – not to mention that valuations remain significantly attractive. Two merger and acquisition deals benefitted the fund in June, and we believe that more corporate activity is on the way. We expect an eventful autumn and winter in terms of clinical development programs, notably in biotechnology. Not all will go well, so we should anticipate setbacks on a regular basis. These, in their own way, have become the hallmark of the fund during its first ten years. But despite these setbacks and, a handful of less successful investments, the fund has managed to more than compensate for the setbacks thanks to its risk diversification with over one hundred carefully selected holdings. We would like to take this opportunity to thank the Scientific Advisory Board for its many valuable contributions to the research process that the fund management team applies in the selection of the fund's investments. We truly look forward to the next ten years.
