MONTHLY UPDATE

It took some time – but then the reaction to the coronavirus (COVID-19) began to snowball. The outbreak in China's Hubei Province attracted attention in January and affected investor risk appetite already at that time. Initially, investors focused on the trend in China alone, and could soon conclude that the number of new cases of infection had gradually tapered off while mortality was relatively low. Stock markets therefore recovered during the first few weeks in February, a month which otherwise saw strong reports, positive economic data and continued large inflows into the markets.

The spread of COVID-19 beyond China prompted strong reactions

When, in mid-February, data surfaced about the spread of the infection outside China, particularly in Iran and Italy, uncertainty grew and the rest of the month was marked by steep declines in the market. The plunge during the last week of February was one of the deepest in one hundred years, with prices dropping more than 10 percent.

The main reason was not only the widespread fear, but specifically the difficulties involved in assessing the powerful and long-lasting negative effects of the coronavirus on the world economy and corporate profits.

Increasing risk appetite came to an abrupt end

Another plausible explanation for the strong reaction is that investors were completely unprepared for this kind of negative news. Risk appetite had increased in the autumn, when both the US-China trade dispute and the Brexit issue had been resolved (at least temporarily). Furthermore, corporate profits were better than expected. Together, this had led to rising optimism about improved economic and profit growth in 2020, which was reflected in the ever-higher equity exposure.

Apart from COVID-19, not much else attracted the interest of investors. One exception though was the concern over the success of Bernie Sanders, the business-hostile left-wing Democrat, in the US primaries. Another was the growing conflict between the UK and the EU over a future trade agreement.

The spread between sectors was small, but the geographical differences were large

The world index decreased 8.2 percent in February, measured in euros. All sectors showed significant declines, but the spread between best and worst sectors was smaller than in previous months. Utilities and information technology fared relatively less poorly, while energy and commodity companies showed the biggest declines. Healthcare shares fared considerably better than the world index, especially US biotechnology shares which were virtually unchanged during the period. Geographically, however, the spread was large, with Hong Kong and NASDAQ faring relatively well, while the UK and Japan showed larger declines.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund decreased 3.2 percent, measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR), and decreased 3.6 percent measured in RC1 (SEK). The fund's best contributors for the month were Iovance

Biotherapeutics and Regeneron Pharmaceuticals. The worst contributors were Glaukos and Novocure.

lovance share price rose sharply after takeover rumours lovance is a US biotechnology company that is developing a new cell therapy treatment utilising the body's own tumour-infiltrating lymphocytes (TIL). A TIL is a type of cell whose purpose is to identify and actively destroy tumour cells. lovance has shown promising data in several tumour types, including on patients with metastatic melanoma whose disease has progressed following immunotherapy treatment. Studies are also underway in cervical cancer, squamous cell carcinoma of the head and neck region, and non-small cell lung cancer.

Towards the end of February, the company became the subject of takeover rumours, which caused the share to react positively. Despite the broad decline that dominated the rest of the market, lovance's share price rose by just over 50 percent.

Regeneron rose on news of possible side effects in competing medicines

Regeneron is one of the major US biotechnology companies. The company's revenue is highly dependent on sales of Eylea, which is approved for the treatment of eye diseases caused by excessive levels of the growth factors VEGF-A and P1GF. Left untreated, these conditions can lead to impaired vision and, in some cases, blindness. Regeneron's share price stood strong in contrast to the sharp dip at the end of the month when reports stated that a new competing product to Eylea, Beovu from Novartis, seemed to cause unexpected side effects.

Since the benefits of Beovu are limited, doctors are likely to instead continue using Eylea, thus helping it retain its market share and Regeneron's share price rose by just over 30 percent.

Looming competition caused Glaukos to fall sharply

Glaukos is a US medical technology company specialising in eye diseases. The company has developed a minimally invasive technology for the treatment of glaucoma, a condition in which pressure in the eye is usually too high. With its product iStent, Glaukos offers an alternative to continuous treatment with eye drops. When the company issued its fourth-quarter and full-year 2019 reports, it warned of increased competition which is expected to have a dampening effect on sales growth in 2020.

This warning came as a surprise to the market, which had not expected increased competition until 2021 at the earliest. As a result, the share price fell sharply.

Novocure hit by concerns over the coronavirus

Novocure is a US medical device company that has developed a new therapy for treating cancer. The therapy uses electric fields tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumour growth. The company's therapy is approved for the treatment of glioblastoma (an aggressive form of brain tumour) and mesothelioma (an aggressive form of lung cancer). In addition to these approvals, the company is conducting several studies in other cancer indications. Increased use in other indications would represent significant sales potential, and this has been partly reflected in the company's valuation.

The share prices of companies trading at high multiples were hit especially hard by the downturn at the end of the month caused by concerns over the effects of the coronavirus, including Novocure's stock.

OUTLOOK

The corona pandemic has created significant uncertainty about the growth of the global economy in 2020 and thus the outlook for profits. However, our current belief is that neither the demand nor the supply of products and services in the healthcare sector should be significantly affected. Although individual companies might face manufacturing problems due to a lack of individual components or inputs, this should not significantly impact the fund as a whole.

We bought at favourably low prices in February

We saw price corrections in the second half of February which offered an appealing opportunity to buy at low prices, something which we have done to a considerable extent. Net exposure therefore increased substantially during February's final days.

Uncertainty in the stock market is obviously significant, and concerns over Senator Bernie Sanders becoming the next president of the United States remain very high. We believe, however, that a unique investment opportunity for the fund emerged as a result of concerns over the coronavirus. The investments were mostly in large companies with low P/E multiples, and this type of company should fare particularly well in a recession.

Social structures and patterns of living will quickly adapt and the pharmaceutical industry are working overtime

Each pandemic has its unique set of circumstances. In the assessment we make today, mortality is significantly lower than officially estimated, but this also means that the spread and size of the pandemic may be significantly greater. The world will quickly adapt to new risks, large and small alike, and our travel habits in particular are bound to change.

We should soon be able to witness a significant progress in the treatment of the new infection using both new and old therapies. Within a year, a vaccine is also likely to be available on the market. We continue to see great opportunities for value creation in the sector in both the short and the long term.
