MONTHLY UPDATE

US politics, Covid-19 and technology stocks continued to make the headlines in September. After a rally in August, in which US technology companies particularly showed substantial gains, September was initially marked by profit-taking and increased caution. We then saw some recovery towards the end of the month, with trading again concentrated on technology stocks. In the absence of company-specific news, virus developments and the impending US presidential election attracted the greatest interest.

Biden still in the lead after a heated debate in Ohio

With just over a month to go until the November election, news feeds focused on the United States. An increasingly polarised situation was clearly visible in the first debate between President Trump and Democrat Joe Biden. The tone in Cleveland, Ohio, was sharp and harsh words from both sides characterised the debate. During the month, Biden's lead in the polls increased. However, in early October, the news broke that President Trump and his wife had tested positive for Covid-19. How this will impact the election is unclear at the time of writing, but the president has already drawn widespread criticism for how he has been handling the pandemic.

Increased spread of Covid-19 worried markets

The second wave of Covid-19 (or, as some might say, the continuation of the first one) in the wake of eased restrictions also dampened risk appetite, especially in Europe. In countries like Spain, France and the United Kingdom the spread of infection increased sharply, partly as a result of increased testing, even though the number of deaths was significantly lower than in the spring. The new restrictions that were imposed or announced prompted investors to worry about the pandemic's effects on the economy. These concerns were reflected in the performance of the energy companies and the banks, sectors that could be hit hard by a weakened economic recovery.

In the shadow of all this, the Brexit negotiations continued. Chief EU negotiator Barnier and his British counterpart Frost met but failed to produce any tangible results. Towards the end of the month, Prime Minister Boris Johnson announced that he would contact German Chancellor Angela Merkel to try and achieve a breakthrough in the negotiations.

Decreased world index in euros

The world index, measured in euros, decreased in September. Industrial enterprises and utilities produced gains, while banks and energy companies again recorded the worst performances. In terms of regions, developments were also mixed, with Japan performing most positively while US stock markets (rather unusually) recorded some declines.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased by 4.4 percent measured in its main share class IC1 (EUR). All subsectors made positive contributions to fund performance. The strong performance was largely due to a major acquisition in biotechnology. This event had a positive effect on similar companies considered to be attractive takeover candidates.

The fund's best contributors in September were Immunomedics and Novocure. The worst contributors were Nektar Therapeutics and MacroGenics.

Immunomedics stock up following takeover bid from Gilead Sciences

Immunomedics was the fund's strongest contributor in September. Immunomedics is a US biotechnology company that develops antibody-based drugs for the targeted treatment of cancer and autoimmune diseases.

The company's newly launched drug, sacituzumab govitecan, is approved for the treatment of refractory metastatic triple-negative breast cancer, which today has very limited treatment options.

During the period, Gilead Sciences made a bid for the company at a premium of 108 percent, corresponding to a company valuation of 21 billion US dollars.

Positive news caused Novocure stock to climb

Novocure is a US medical device company that has developed a novel therapy to treat cancer. The therapy uses electric fields tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumour growth. The company's technology is approved for the treatment of glioblastoma (an aggressive form of brain tumour) and mesothelioma (an aggressive form of lung cancer). Novocure is also conducting studies in other cancer areas. Increased use in one or more of these areas would mean significantly higher sales potential for the company.

In September, the stock rose by 35 percent on several encouraging pieces of news, including favorable reimbursement progress and expansion in patient recruitment to some of the company's clinical trials.

Nektar Therapeutics' lack of clinical data caused stock to fall

Nektar Therapeutics has unique pegylation methods for therapeutic substances. Its first candidate is derived from interleukin-2, an established but highly toxic drug with considerable broad use potential if the toxic properties can be mastered. Pegylation involves attaching hydrophilic polymer tails to a molecule in order to change its pharmacological properties. Nektar is primarily known for its research portfolio in immuno-oncology, where the company is striving to develop effective combination therapies, while its portfolio also includes autoimmune diseases.

The lack of new clinical data in the autumn is feeding investor concerns that the first drug candidate is not sufficiently well documented, in the early clinical phase, to undergo the extensive registration studies currently underway. 2021 will be a crucial year for the company.

MacroGenics awaiting clinical data so stock can pick up again

MacroGenics is a US biotechnology company specialising in cancer and next-generation antibody technologies. The company's most advanced development project, margetuximab, is first being developed for the treatment of HER2-positive breast cancer. However, despite interesting data, the substance is considered to have only a limited market in this particular indication because the first commercial product, Herceptin from Roche, is now biogeneric, with markedly falling prices. Furthermore, new and even more potent drugs will soon be coming onto the market. Thus, the company stands or falls mostly with other projects in its pipeline, in particular so-called 'bispecific antibodies', which are still in early development.

The stock performed strongly in the summer due to unexpectedly promising data but has fallen back in the autumn. More clinical data is needed to take the stock to a new level where the company can be said to have another drug candidate with proof-of-concept. Therefore, 2021 will be a critical year for MacroGenics.

OUTLOOK

The fund certainly had a good month in September. But, we expect the risk of a backlash to increase in October, right before the US elections. However, we believe that it is worth having a relatively high net exposure in the fund during this critical period. The market has a growing impression that Biden will not seek any major reforms in the public healthcare sector but will build on structures that already exist:

1. Strengthen Obamacare.
2. Further expand Medicaid contributions to the states.
3. Expand Medicare to certain underinsured groups who are not yet 65 years of age.
4. Reform Medicare parts B and D (in other words, drug insurance) to lower drug prices and reduce costs for the patient.

In many senses, these four reforms are perfectly rational and understandable if we take the current healthcare system as our starting point. The fourth item contains the most uncertainty for the fund, but our general assessment is that any drug reform will be reasonably balanced and higher volumes will compensate for lower prices, at least to some extent.

The healthcare sector will remain attractive after the election

When the election is over and the market can look to the future, the healthcare sector will still be attractive. Its valuation is on par with its historical average. A Biden administration will increase the federal budget for healthcare. The pharmaceutical industry's image has improved as a result of Covid-19, and the sector is in a dynamic development phase with innovation proceeding at a breakneck pace.

In our view, we are facing a highly promising winter half-year in the financial markets for healthcare companies. Continued acquisitions indicate high underlying values. The strong long-term trends are intact, and the market can hopefully soon lift its gaze from the politics of the day to the promising medical opportunities going forward.
