MONTHLY UPDATE

Voting, vaccines and value stocks. This about sums up November 2020, which was one of the strongest trading months in many years. This was partly because the outcome of the US presidential election votes became increasingly clear, but primarily because of the good news on the vaccine front. The latter led to rising hopes of a progressive normalisation of the economy which was especially reflected in the huge gains of cyclical sectors, such as banks and energy companies, which were viewed as potentially big losers in the pandemic.

Clear election result reassured investors

Although Donald Trump stubbornly refused to admit defeat, Joe Biden's victory in the US presidential election became increasingly apparent. It dispelled concerns over a protracted process before the appointment of a new president. Investors also appreciated that the balance of power between the House of Representatives (Democratic) and Senate (Republican) looked as if it would be maintained, which meant that the Democrats' more radical proposals were unlikely to materialise. The appointment of former Federal Reserve Chair, Janet Yellen, as treasury secretary also received a warm welcome.

News of ready-to-use vaccines delighted investors

However, the big news in November was the progress on vaccine development. Within the space of a few weeks, Pfizer, Moderna and Astra Zeneca all presented their test results indicating generally high levels of disease protection. The companies also announced that their respective vaccines, following approval, would be available around the end of the year or in early 2021. Several countries subsequently announced that vaccination programs would begin shortly.

The positive response to this news meant that investors attached less and less importance to the new restrictions caused by the continued high spread of Covid-19. Some countries, however, began to show evidence of a slowdown in the number of individuals infected, and some of the restrictions from the autumn appeared to be easing in these countries.

Brexit continued to attract interest

In the shadow of the election and the vaccine, the long-standing process surrounding Brexit attracted a great deal of interest. Following lengthy negotiations, a number of issues still remained, not least concerning fisheries, trade disputes and the border between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Some progress was made, however, and there appeared to be a greater likelihood of arriving at a solution by the end of the year.

World index and all global sectors rose in November

The world index therefore rose sharply in November, as too did all global sectors. Energy companies, banks and industrial companies recorded the biggest gains, while more defensive sectors such as utilities, consumer staples and healthcare lagged behind. All regions rose as well, with Europe and Japan in the lead, while the US and Hong Kong showed lower positive returns.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund rose 6.3 percent in its main class IC1 (EUR) and 5.3 percent in RC1 (SEK). A weakening of the US dollar dragged down returns by - 2.5 percent and - 3.5 percent, respectively, in the two share classes. All subsectors boosted the fund's performance. The best contributors to the fund during the month were Cigna and AbbVie. The worst contributors were Arena Pharmaceuticals and Horizon Therapeutics.

Close senate elections and a positive quarterly report gave Cigna stock a boost

One of the best contributors in November was the US health insurance company Cigna. Close results in the US senate elections gave a boost to the share prices of managed care companies, since investors perceived a lower risk of major reforms to the US healthcare system.

In addition, Cigna released a quarterly report during the month that exceeded market expectations. The company also raised its full-year outlook for 2020 and maintained its outlook for 2021. During the period, Amazon announced two new pharmacy services, one of which will be administered by Cigna's business unit, Evernorth (formerly Express Scripts). The partnership with Amazon may prove strategically significant in a more competitive US pharmacy market.

AbbVie's new products convinced investors

Following the acquisition of Allergan last year, AbbVie is today one of the largest pharmaceutical companies in the United States. However, the majority of the company's revenues are still concentrated to its flagship product Humira, an antibody widely used for various autoimmune diseases, which is expected to face competition from biogenerics in 2023. For this reason, AbbVie's share price has been under pressure in recent years.

With the successful launch of two new products, Rinvoq and Skyrizi, the company has nevertheless shown this year that it is well on its way to making up for sales lost to biogenerics with a renewed product portfolio. AbbVie has raised its sales outlook twice in 2020, and its share price has strengthened as investors become increasingly confident about its growth prospects.

Ambiguous results sent Arena Pharmaceutical share price down

Arena Pharmaceuticals is a US research company with several clinical trial programs in the pipeline. The company's leading drug candidate, etrasimod, is a so-called selective sphingosine 1-phosphate (S1P) receptor modulator that has demonstrated immunosuppressive effects. Etrasimod is being evaluated in a wide range of autoimmune diseases, such as ulcerative colitis, Crohn's disease, atopic dermatitis and patchy hair loss (alopecia areata).

In November, the company presented results from a phase II study into atopic dermatitis (eczema) that created some uncertainty about its efficacy, which caused the share price to react negatively. Atopic dermatitis has become a competitive area, placing high demands on potential new drugs to demonstrate good efficacy and safety.

Profit-taking lowered Horizon Therapeutics share price

Horizon Therapeutics is a US pharmaceutical company specialising in rare diseases. Despite the pandemic, the launch of Tepezza has surpassed market expectations. Tepezza is an IGF-1R inhibitor for the treatment of thyroid eye disease caused by excessive levels of thyroid hormones. With the exception of surgery, alternative therapies have been lacking in the past and the significant medical need is now being reflected in Tepezza's strong sales trend.

The company raised its outlook for the product during the year, resulting in a strong share price performance. However, some profit-taking took place in November which contributed negatively to fund performance.

OUTLOOK

An extraordinarily exciting and interesting month can be added to what looks like a highly memorable year for the stock market. The fact that promising vaccine data is creating a rotation into cyclical stocks and stable value companies, is perhaps both logical and obvious but the momentum is probably still surprising.

The outlook looks promising for getting 'back to normal'

We seem poised to move towards a continued strong stock market. With all due respect for tech stocks, a broadening is necessary to keep the gains coming so as to avoid excessive imbalances in valuations. As the economy picks up in the new year, when the cases of infection, hospitalisations and death rates fall and people return to their normal lives, many neglected consumption and investment needs will have to be addressed.

Economic rescue packages and ultra-light monetary policies will continue to vigorously stimulate economies. Low interest rates may rise, but from very low levels. Capacity utilisation will rise, as will profits. All the ingredients are in place for a good stock market year in 2021.

As far as the fund goes, we are also optimistic. The Biden administration will continue to build on existing healthcare structures. Any major new reforms are unlikely, despite high hopes and expectations on the part of many Democrats. Even if the Democrats were to win the key senate run-off elections in early January, with the vice-president casting the final 50-50 tiebreaking vote, this would not constitute a strong enough legislative base for major reforms.

Well placed to achieve positive returns during 2021

As in 2009, after the financial crisis ended, the healthcare sector will possibly lag behind the stock market as a whole during the coming year. Despite this, we believe we will be well placed to achieve positive returns. Valuations today are as depressed as they were in 2009 in relation to the stock market as a whole. The big difference compared to then is that product development in the industry has increased significantly. We expect that in 2021 the sector will once again show numerous examples of its impressive powers of innovation, and discover critical new treatments for serious diseases.

We continue our systematic efforts to find the very best and most promising companies, mixed with a diversified portfolio of short positions in companies where high expectations can be difficult to meet.
