MONTHLY UPDATE

A terrible year for the world, but an unexpectedly good year for the stock markets – this sums up 2020. The year ended in the same way it began, with US growth stocks in December once again recording their best performance. The shift towards cyclically sensitive sectors, which occurred mainly due to positive vaccine news in November, came to a halt. December thus reflected 2020 as a whole.

The Nasdaq, the tech-heavy exchange in the United States, rose sharply in 2020 while Hong Kong and most European stock exchanges underperformed.

Thanks to the vaccine programs which were launched in several countries in December 2020, and to new stimulus packages, investors' risk appetite remained healthy during the month. The pandemic, however, continued to weigh heavily on the mood as restrictions around the world were further tightened.

President Trump obstructed issues to the bitter end

Although Donald Trump continued to reject the outcome of the presidential election, the appeals he made in several states did not lead to any changes in the election results and Joe Biden's victory was upheld by the electoral commission. However, the outgoing president also played a central role in politics in December by delaying approval of the new stimulus package and opposing the defense budget.

Brexit deal finally in place

In other major political news, the UK and the EU finally succeeded in agreeing on the terms of Brexit. Following direct negotiations between Boris Johnson and Ursula von der Leyen, an agreement was reached just one week before the deadline expired at the end of the year. Although some components of the deal remained unresolved, especially concerning the UK's key services sector, the agreement was considered a success.

Nasdaq the top stock market performer

The world index measured in dollars and euros rose in December.

FUND PERFORMANCE

The fund increased 4.8 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR) during December. For the full year 2020, the fund increased 17.1 percent in its main class IC1 (EUR).

A weakening of the US dollar dragged down returns by roughly -2 percent during December. All subsectors added to fund performance, with medical technology and biotechnology contributing the most in December. The best contributors to the fund were Novocure and Alexion Pharmaceuticals. The worst contributors were AstraZeneca and Mirati Therapeutics.

Novocure's share value has risen steadily thanks to expanded studies

Novocure is a US medical device company that has developed a novel therapy to treat cancer. The therapy uses electric fields tuned to specific frequencies to disrupt cell division and thus inhibit tumor growth. The company's technology is approved for the treatment of glioblastoma (an aggressive form of brain tumor) and mesothelioma (an aggressive form of lung cancer).

Novocure is also conducting studies into other cancer areas, and an expansion of Optune's area of application would offer a significant increase in the product's sales potential. Novocure was one of the best contributors in 2020. The stock soared 105 percent during the full year and 38 percent in December.

Alexion Pharmaceuticals acquired by AstraZeneca

Alexion is a US biotechnology company specializing in rare diseases. In December, AstraZeneca made a bid for Alexion, offering shareholders 60 US dollars and 2.1243 American Depository Receipt (ADR) shares per Alexion share. Based on the closing rates prior to announcement of the bid, the total transaction value was 39 billion dollars, corresponding to a bid premium of approximately 45 percent.

Alexion's board of directors has recommended shareholders to accept the bid. The transaction is expected to close in the third quarter of 2021, and Alexion's shareholders will then own approximately 15 percent of the new company.

AstraZeneca bid for Alexion received negatively, sending share price down

AstraZeneca is a global pharmaceutical company specializing in cancer drugs. The company's launches of new cancer treatments in recent years have placed it among the fastest growing global pharmaceutical companies. However, during a period of increased generic competition to the company's older products in cardiovascular diseases, combined with intensive marketing efforts around the new cancer portfolio, its cash flows have been considerably restricted.

With the acquisition of Alexion, AstraZeneca will increase its cash flows by an average of 27 percent annually over the next four years. At the same time, they are lowering their growth rate over the long term by integrating Alexion's product portfolio which is significantly more profitable but has lower growth prospects than AstraZeneca's.

The company's share price reacted negatively to the news of the acquisition, and the fund's holding in AstraZeneca thus contributed negatively to the fund's performance during the month.

Mirati Therapeutics share price fell after earlier rise

Mirati Therapeutics is a US biotechnology company that develops targeted cancer therapies. Investors have shown particular interest in the company's research on mutations in the KRAS gene, with Mirati and Amgen leading developments with their respective projects. In October, Mirati presented convincing tumor response data in non-small cell lung cancer.

Unlike many other gene mutations that are often rare, the KRAS mutation is relatively common in several tumor types, and thus offers significant market potential for an approved drug. Early studies have also shown that there may be potential synergies with KRAS inhibitors and a PD-L1 inhibitor in combination therapy, making the mechanism of action an interesting complement to companies whose sales are mainly based on PD-L1 inhibitors.

The clinical advances made by the company during the year caused its share price to climb by 72 percent in 2020. However, like many other smaller biotech companies, Mirati saw its share price fall back slightly in the final weeks of December.

OUTLOOK

A challenging year has come to an end. The volatile markets in March and April were testing for fund managers and investor collectives alike. Despite a very weak dollar, the fund met its positive return target of 12%. Gradually, the market regained confidence as vaccine development picked up and clinical data indicated that the pandemic could be subdued in 2021.

The end of the Georgia run-offs at the outset of the new year came as a relief to the market. The Senate will now be controlled by Democrats with the help of Vice-President Harris' tiebreaking vote. Once the acute issues related to the pandemic have been brought under control, healthcare issues will then be re-examined.

Our belief, that major new healthcare reforms will be difficult to push through with a weak majority in the Senate, remains. The reinstatement of the original Affordable Care Act (ACA) that Democrats now have in mind, following various amendments made by Republicans, requires budget reinforcements and tax increases. The issue of lowering drug prices for Medicare will be a natural part of efforts to bolster the ACA. This is probably the most crucial issue that the fund will face in 2021.

Reductions in drug prices, on the other hand, may benefit the fund in several ways. In all likelihood, any such reform will be associated with lower deductibles for patients, thus creating greater demand for expensive medicines. It is also gratifying that such a reform will come about in a relatively weak legislative branch, and at a time when the public perception of pharmaceutical companies is more positive than usual due to the rapid development of vaccines and drugs for fighting Covid-19. Hopefully, the question of prices can finally achieve a long-term solution and the market can adjust its earnings forecasts once and for all (or, at least for a longer period of time).

Many large companies in our sector have record low relative valuations. This is natural, as the economic outlook improves, which mainly benefits sectors other than healthcare and also when the political risk is still uncertain. We have great confidence in the fund's ability to continue delivering healthy returns in 2021, albeit that other sectors might perform better. As always, a long investment horizon should be adopted when investing in the fund.
