MONTHLY UPDATE

The biggest invasion to hit Europe in more than 80 years dominated the news in March. What Russia still calls "a special military operation" and which they had hoped would be over in a week or two developed into an all-out war. After a few weeks, it was clear that the Russian offensive was in big trouble and suffering significant losses. Seemingly, Russia did not expect Ukraine to offer such fierce resistance, or for the rest of the world to supply the Ukrainians with modern weapons in such vast quantities. As a result, their tactics shifted and massive shelling was carried out against civilian targets in cities like Mariupol in eastern Ukraine. A handful of negotiation attempts took place between the parties, the most recent at a meeting in Istanbul during the last few days of the month but yielded no apparent results.

Far-reaching sanctions caused the ruble to fall and the Moscow Stock Exchange to close

In addition to providing Ukraine with weapons and humanitarian aid for the several million people fleeing the war, several countries led by the United States and the EU imposed far-reaching sanctions on Russian government officials, banks and other companies as well as the so-called oligarchs. Everything from access to financial markets to yachts and villas on the French Riviera were frozen or seized. Although exceptions were made for energy companies, largely in light of Europe's dependency on Russian oil and gas, private operators effectively imposed an embargo. Most Western companies shut down their operations in Russia. The ruble initially plunged and the Moscow Stock Exchange closed for several weeks.

All of this had an impact on already strained supply chains. In the three major commodity categories, energy, metals and agriculture, prices soared as supply shrank and transport was disrupted. New Covid-related lockdowns in China caused further disruptions.

The world's central banks became increasingly hawkish, with more and earlier interest rate hikes expected

In parallel, the world's central banks became increasingly hawkish. The tone sharpened at the US Federal Reserve meeting on March 16, and another six hikes were signaled for 2022 in addition to a 0.25 percentage point increase in the benchmark interest rate. The ECB is also expected to raise rates much earlier than analysts had previously thought. The reason is inflation, which continues to be the highest in decades.

Against this background of humanitarian, geopolitical and financial turmoil, it can be concluded that stock markets fared surprisingly well. After the year began on a rather weak note and continued to decline during the invasion, stock prices bounced back in mid-March and were higher at the end of the month than at the war's outset.

World indices increased during the month, though with significant differences between sectors and regions. Energy and healthcare companies recorded the biggest gains, while banks and consumer staples fell back. In terms of regions, the United States fared best, Europe showed a slight uptick, while Hong Kong ended lower.

FUND PERFORMANCE

In March, the fund increased by 5.6 percent in its main share class IC1 (EUR). The deteriorating growth prospects predicted for the global economy as a result of high inflation and increased geopolitical tensions sparked investor interest in defensive assets, which benefited our sector. It was primarily the profitable companies with solid balance sheets and low valuations that added to positive returns in March.

The month's best contributors for the fund were Horizon Therapeutics and Eli Lilly. The worst contributors were Nektar Therapeutics and Xencor.

Stable growth and an attractive valuation boosted Horizon Therapeutics' share price

Horizon Therapeutics is a US pharmaceutical company specializing in rare diseases. The company's revenue comes from Krystexxa, for the treatment of refractory gout, and Tepezza, an IGF-1R inhibitor for the treatment of thyroid eye disease caused by excessive levels of thyroid hormone. Both products have strong growth profiles driven by significant medical needs and few alternative therapies. The company's stable growth and profitability, combined with an attractive valuation, boosted its share price during the month.

Eli Lilly recovered thanks to its attractive growth profile

Eli Lilly is a US pharmaceutical company focused on diabetes, cancer and immunological diseases, all major global markets with extensive medical needs. Thanks to several successful product launches, the company has one of the more attractive growth profiles in the sector. It has an exciting year ahead, with final results set to be presented for tirzepatide in obesity. At the same time, data from competitors in Alzheimer's will provide guidance on the potential for donanemab, Lilly's antibody that reduces amyloid plaque in Alzheimer's patients. After a weak start to the year, the share price recovered in March.

Disappointing Phase 3 trial data negatively impacted Nectar Therapeutics

Nektar is a US biotechnology company that develops new drugs for the treatment of cancer, autoimmune diseases and chronic inflammatory conditions.

In March, the company presented the results of a high-profile phase 3 study in malignant melanoma (skin cancer), which evaluated its drug candidate bempagaldesleukin, an IL-2 agonist, in combination with Opdivo, a PD-L1 inhibitor, compared to Opdivo monotherapy as a first-line treatment. The results were disappointing since there was no additional clinical benefit in the combination treatment arm, sending the stock down sharply.

Weak performance for Xencor's share price

Xencor is a US biotechnology company with a portfolio of antibody technologies that can be applied in various diseases. The company develops its own drug candidates and derives revenue from collaborations in which Xencor licenses its technology.

Xencor's share price performed weakly during the month. Like many smaller US biotech companies, its share price has halved since a peak in February last year.

OUTLOOK

An incredibly brutal and unexpectedly extensive war in Ukraine has provided a relative advantage for the healthcare sector on the stock market. As a fund manager, it is difficult to fully take in and appreciate the fund's positive performance in a world full of atrocities and tragedies. At the same time, the threat of inflation has risen and the growth prospects of many economies have weakened, especially in Europe and China. Central banks are likely to be forced to accelerate interest rate hikes and the stock market outlook is therefore, without a doubt, uncertain. Given this situation, we have chosen to sell off another portion of our relatively high net exposure. We must weigh the conviction that our sector remains largely unscathed by the war itself with the undeniable increase in uncertainty and risks to financial markets resulting from rising interest rates and inflation as well as lower growth.

High volatility, profit warnings and downwardly revised forecasts going forward

First-quarter reports should, as always, guide the stock market. We expect significant volatility in the second half of April. We can generally expect both profit warnings and downwardly revised forecasts for the full year, and it is difficult to know in advance how our sector will cope. Omicron, job vacancies in healthcare, higher wages, higher costs in general – these can all create concerns, especially in the service sector and in medical technology. Biotechnology can get sidelined when other sectors steal the spotlight. Pharmaceuticals should manage the best. The strong dollar could put several of the bigger companies at a disadvantage, but it could of course benefit others. In our current assessment, major pharmaceutical companies appear to be coping with the macroeconomic uncertainties best. Nevertheless, despite the greater uncertainty in forecasts, continued low valuations give us confidence about the potential for a positive development for the rest of the year.

Earnings season in focus

We are approaching the upcoming earnings season with caution yet with great interest. We might be looking at some quite exciting purchase opportunities in conjunction with both strong and weak reports resulting from generally troubled markets. In our view, the outlook for the year is still positive. We repeat, however, what we stated in previous monthly reports: the year is likely to bring tailwinds with the greatest opportunity for potential gains likely after the US midterm elections.
