Monthly comment

The federal government of the United States remained shut down throughout October, as Congress continued to struggle to reach agreement on budget appropriations for the new fiscal year. The deadlock primarily concerned funding allocation for healthcare and social support programs, with the Democrats demanding clearer guarantees for subsidies under the Affordable Care Act (ACA).

While the shutdown has now extended beyond one month, the impact on the healthcare sector has been limited. Most healthcare operations are classified as essential, ensuring continuity of critical services and payment.

Earnings season off to a strong start

The third-quarter earnings season began on a positive note, with strong performances from the major healthcare companies. Earnings from small- and mid-caps companies are expected in November.

- ◆ Pharmaceuticals: Overall, pharma companies delivered strong reports with positive growth, successful product launches, and effective cost control. Several major names reported double-digit earnings growth and continued progress in key research areas.
- ◆ Medical technology: The sector reported stable growth, supported by some currency tailwinds (measured in USD) despite negative tariff effects. Since May, the sector has been affected by market rotation, partly favoring biotechnology.
- ◆ Healthcare services: Providers noted slightly weaker volumes which was offset by pricing acuity, leading to increased demand for more complex products and services, such as cardiovascular and orthopedic procedures. Margins remained strong, with good capacity utilization and expectations of positive volume trends driven by the underlying demand.
- ◆ Biotechnology: Most biotech earnings are expected after the end of the month, and focus will remain on clinical updates rather than financial numbers.

Biotechnology the strongest sub-sector during the month

Biotechnology continued to perform strongly, while other healthcare subsectors showed more mixed performances. Pharmaceutical stocks surged early in the month, driven by positive signals from the MFN negotiations. Momentum then eased somewhat despite mostly positive quarterly reports, resulting in a more muted development. Healthcare services saw some profit-taking in the last two weeks of the month. The sub-sector has rebounded strongly since early August. UnitedHealth Group, a bellwether for the group, rose by over 40 percent from its August lows, though it was still down by 45 percent from last year's peak. Medical technology showed the weakest performance during the month, with significant variation among companies whose stock prices fluctuated by around 20 percent for the major players. Selectivity was key rather than a broad sub-sector interest.

Progress in MFN negotiations

The Most Favored Nation (MFN) negotiations between the administration and the pharmaceutical industry made clear progress in October. The MFN framework aims to lower US drug prices by linking them to the lowest levels in other developed countries, while offering relief through tariff exemptions and incentives for US production and research. This development marks a shift toward a more protectionist pharmaceutical policy, combining price pressure with support for domestic innovation. After Pfizer signed the very first MFN agreement with the administration in September, AstraZeneca followed and announced its own deal with the administration in October. The agreement was largely similar to Pfizer's and was received positively, as it was seen as a step toward more predictable conditions for pharmaceutical companies. More agreements are expected in the coming months, although some uncertainty remains.

Fund performance

The fund increased in value in October by 9.9 percent in share class IC1 (EUR). All subsectors contributed positively, with particularly strong contributions from the biotechnology and medical technology sub-sectors. Selectivity was a key driver of the fund's strong performance, combined with increased trading activity following several sharp market reactions that created opportunities. The fund had one biotech acquisition during the month, as Novo Nordisk announced its intention to acquire US based Akero Therapeutics earlier in the month. Akero is a biotech company with a late-stage product for treating liver disease MASH.

Top contributors for the fund were Insmmed and Intuitive Surgical, while Encompass and Doximity detracted.

Another strong quarter for Insmmed

Biotech company Insmmed has enjoyed strong momentum for both Brinsupri, recently approved for treatment of respiratory disorder bronchiectasis, and TPIP, an inhaled drug candidate which has shown promising clinical data in pulmonary hypertension. In the quarterly earnings report, Insmmed provided positive updates for both drugs. Brinsupri sales indicated a rapid and broad initial uptake and multiple TPIP registration trials were set to initiate in the upcoming months. On the back of these updates, Insmmed's stock appreciated during the month.

Strong report and upgrade for Intuitive Surgical

Intuitive Surgical performed strongly after a positive earnings print. The company reported continued strong demand for its robotic surgical systems with nearly 20 percent volume growth in the US. The ongoing upgrade cycle to the DV5 platform, with 10,000 the computing power of da Vinci Xi and improved AI features, has been well received and is expected to drive structural growth for years. The company raised its full-year procedure growth forecasts.

Encompass fell victim to high expectations

Encompass operates inpatient rehabilitation facilities, also known as IRFs. Encompass is the market leader in this niche, which has experienced strong growth in recent years thanks to, among other things, political and payor support. Toward the end of the month, the company reported strong earnings growth; however, the market reaction was muted as discharge growth fell short of high expectations.

Doximity suffered from profit-taking

Doximity operates a professional network for healthcare professionals. The company is often described as a "LinkedIn for doctors", as its platform reaches over 80 percent of all physicians in the United States. In addition, Doximity is developing AI-powered response tools for medical professionals. The stock has performed strongly recently but faced downgrades from investment banks during the month due to valuation concerns. Furthermore, an unlisted competitor completed a large funding round during the same period.

Reflections

Congress needs bipartisan cooperation to approve temporary funding and reopen government operations. The Democrats are demanding an extension of the enhanced subsidies under the Affordable Care Act whereas Republicans have advocated for a continuing resolution without additional policy changes, linking budget approval to stricter border controls and reduced foreign aid. While a resolution is broadly anticipated, both the timing and the final scope of the agreement remain uncertain.

After months of political and regulatory uncertainty, conditions for the healthcare sector have gradually improved. Previous concerns about the MFN process have eased as uncertainty has abated.

Signs of broader investment appetite

We see signs of broader investment interest in the sector, supported by valuations as the sector trades at attractive levels relative to the market. However, there is a risk of temporary technical resistance during the last quarter of the year, due to tax-loss selling activities, as weaker stocks tend to come under additional pressure towards year-end. In the near term, FDA actions may also influence biotech sentiment if they are perceived as being more restrictive. Smaller biotechnology and medical technology companies would be most affected.

Despite seasonal factors and potential volatility stemming from an unpredictable FDA, we continue to view the overall outlook as skewed to the upside, with favorable conditions for the sector to continue its run from depressed levels.
