Monthly comment

The healthcare sector delivered a positive rebound in August and for part of the month, it was the best performing sector in the S&P 500 index. The sector ended however, the month in fourth place as momentum reversed significantly in the final days of the month due to macro-economic volatility and profit-taking. Within the sector, performance has, however, been highly diverse; for instance, the biotech-focused ETF, XBI, returned 9.6 percent during the month, while the healthcare services sector lagged at negative 2.6 percent, mainly driven by profit taking, post a strong run-up.

Biopharma was the key driver of the sector performance in August, with Moderna and Merck rallying on breakthrough cancer vaccine data. The trial has potential to be one of the most important clinical trials of the decade, which invigorated the whole biopharma sub-sector and pushed it to new highs. Moreover, there have been many other positive updates, including additional M&A transactions, solid earnings and a continuing broadening out of the market participation beyond the tech sector, which altogether made biopharma a logical landing spot for capital flows during the month.

A solid earnings tape and more M&A deals

The second quarter earnings season for the healthcare sector was characterized by resilient top-line growth and earnings beats, particularly within the managed care and pharma segments. Specifically, earnings for the healthcare services sub-sector were generally strong, boosted by low care utilization. The share price performance has, however, been soft lately driven by profit taking on back of strong performance into the numbers and elevated multiples. Moreover, the sentiment for managed care companies has softened going into the October-release of the yearly publication of Medicare Advantage and Part D star ratings by the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS). The ratings are highly impactful on managed care companies' profitability, generating some nervousness, particularly as the outlook for stars this year is unusually complex due to litigation, plan exits and so called "cut-points" uncertainty. The life science tools part of the healthcare services sub-sector has been a bright spot, demonstrating an overall mid-single digit underlying growth for the first time since 2021. This was viewed as an early signal of a long-awaited improving market backdrop driven by biopharma-spending inflection, an improved outlook from the National Institutes of Health and a China-recovery. For medtech, the quarter was marked by a recovery in organic growth across major companies, leading several industry leaders to raising their full-year 2026 outlooks. The overall share price performance was positive, particularly among the small- to mid-cap names, and valuation for the sector, as a whole, has trickled upwards while still trailing well below its five-year average.[1]

The positive sentiment in pharma and biotech in the second quarter has been above all driven by a dealmaking boom. M&A activity hit roughly USD80bn in cumulative value during the quarter, headlined by four major acquisitions over USD10bn. The pace was record-setting industry-wide and supported a strong momentum in the space.

Moderna and Merck strike gold on cancer-vaccine trial

Moderna and Merck recently announced a landmark milestone in oncology, reporting positive Phase 3 data for the personalized therapeutic cancer vaccine, intismeran, in patients with high-risk melanoma. This represented the first successful global late-stage validation of a personalized mRNA-based cancer therapy. Moderna's share price soared 177 percent on the news, and combined they added USD92bn in market value. The news also created a ripple effect through the sector (the biotech ETF, XBI, surged almost 6 percent on the day), particularly propelling companies associated with personalized medicine and mRNA-based therapies. Also, diagnostics and life science tools companies saw a positive jolt as secondary beneficiaries. Moderna and partner Merck now intend to file for approval with a launch potentially already in 2027. Moderna is advancing this technological concept also in other tumor indications, such as lung cancer, bladder cancer and renal cancer.

Fund performance

In August, the fund saw a positive performance by 2.37 percent in the main share class IC1 (EUR) and by 3.83 percent in RC1 (SEK). The biotech subsector was the main contributor to the performance, followed by medtech. It was, however, larger cap names that drove the performance, with smaller caps ending the month rather flattish. During the month, we saw a rotation into biopharma as capital flows moved into the sector primarily driven by biotech euphoria and rotation into defensive growth large cap names. The best contributors for the month were all biopharma names, including Iovance, Insmed and Merck. On the other hand, the fund encountered a setback in the biotech company Sionna, that failed a clinical readout in cystic fibrosis. Sionna together with CVS Health were the worst contributors to the fund performance. Due to strong momentum in the biopharma sector, the exposure was increased slightly to both pharma and biotech, at the same time the exposure to the healthcare services sub-sector was decreased following a strong performance in July. Towards end of the month, the fund's net exposure was decreased by a few percentage points, taking profits where justified while also assuming a somewhat more cautious positioning ahead of a potentially more volatile period.

Iovance regained momentum in ongoing melanoma launch
The US biotech Iovance launched Amtagvi (lifileucel) two years ago, for use in advanced melanoma. It was the first approved cell therapy for solid tumors with encouraging results in hard-to-treat patients. During the second quarter earnings, the company reported strong earnings momentum for Amtagvi with a marked increase in patient numbers. Given the previous logistical challenges of producing and distributing Amtagvi, the strong launch trajectory came as welcome news for the market. In addition, the promising results from Moderna/Merck in the same indication placed further focus on tailored approaches in melanoma treatment, which also fueled Iovance's share price.

Insmed's earnings was a breath of fresh air for Brinsupri
Insmed is a US biotech company focusing on respiratory diseases. Investor focus has mainly lied in the ongoing launch of Brinsupri (brensocatib), the first approved treatment for the rare lung disease bronchiectasis. After a remarkably strong initial launch phase, Brinsupri uptake had somewhat slowed heading into earnings reporting, causing some caution among investors. As the company then delivered strong results for Brinsupri during earnings, the stock price appreciated as the drug is well poised to become a mega-blockbuster drug.

Disappointing trial readout for Sionna Therapeutics
The US biotech Sionna focuses on developing new treatments for rare disease cystic fibrosis. Its key asset SION-719 was developed in combination with standard-of-care treatment to further reduce sweat chloride, a hallmark symptom of the disease. The results from the Phase 2 trial PreCISION CF were published during the month and saw no significant added benefit of SION-719. As some safety signals were also seen, future combination approaches remain unclear at this stage. The company is committed to fully exploring the results and will provide further details by year-end.

CVS Health shares fell on Caremark comments
CVS Health is an American healthcare conglomerate operating in pharmacy benefits, health insurance, and pharmacy. In August, the company reported strong quarterly results, with roughly 40 percent profit growth and raised financial guidance for the year. The stock fell, however, on the back of comments regarding the 340B program and membership losses in Caremark. 340B is a federal program that requires drug manufacturers to sell drugs at steeply discounted prices to hospitals that treat low-income patients. CVS administers these claims on behalf of providers. Political proposals to alter reimbursement for 340B drugs, manufacturers tightening which claims qualify, and patent expirations for blockbuster drugs are creating a profit headwind for CVS next year. Moreover, the company flagged membership declines in Caremark due to pricing model transition and health plan exits.

Reflections

This past quarter, the S&P 500 index delivered its strongest quarterly gain since 2020[2] driven by record-breaking corporate earnings. Indeed, many indices have been hitting new highs. However, we are now facing the inherently more volatile second half, of this US midterm election year, creating a sense of caution. The coming period contains significant political and macro-economic events and catalysts, including the election for which the debate climate is starting to heat up. Combined, this could further fuel the rotation into more defensive names, hence benefiting certain parts of the healthcare sector. That said, it is likely to be volatile.

Federal Reserve Chair, Kevin Warsh, used his debut Jackson Hole Symposium speech to signal a hardline stance on inflation, causing short-term bond yields to jump. While not implying immediate interest hikes, Mr. Warsh stated that inflation remains too high and that the Fed has work to do if the 2 percent target is not reached. A potential step-up in interest rates would primarily hurt the more interest sensitive small-cap universe, including the biotech sub-sector. On the other hand, well capitalized large-cap names, including pharma and managed care companies, could potentially offer a safer place for investors.

A close eye on the bond market
The market is also keeping a close eye on the long-end bond market which increasingly looks like the pressure valve for two of the forces powering the US economy - extraordinary government spending and an AI buildout requiring extraordinary amounts of capital. Consequently, the long-end yields have been hitting multi-decade highs. Equities have, so far, largely absorbed the pressure as earnings have been strong and market participation has broadened beyond the tech sector, but the tension is noticeable.

In November, US voters will head to the polls for the mid-term election. All House members and one-third of the seats in the Senate are up for re-election and hence this election could repaint the political landscape over the next two years. Cost-of-living, including energy prices, housing and Social Security, have dominated the debate with healthcare, so far, playing a more limited role. The healthcare sector is, however, an easy target for easy political points which could add to volatility in the near term. That said, healthcare is an industry with strong national interest, something we were reminded of last year when all the harsh rhetoric against the sector mostly resulted in relatively benign measures. In conclusion, while we may encounter near-term volatility we remain positive on the mid-to-long-term outlook for the healthcare sector supported by strong underlying growth momentum.

This material has been prepared by Rhenman & Partners for professional and non-professional investors. Rhenman & Partners when preparing this information has not taken into account any one customer's particular investment objectives, financial resources or other relevant circumstances and the opinions and recommendations herein are not intended to represent recommendations of particular investments to particular customers. Investors are strongly recommended to get professional advice as to whether investment in either of the Funds is appropriate having regard to their particular investment needs, objectives and financial circumstances before investing.

Past performance does not predict future returns. Future performance is subject to taxation, which depends on investors' situation and may change in the future. Any scenario presented, as applicable, is an estimate of future performance based on evidence from the past on how the value of this investment varies, and/or current market conditions and is not an exact indicator; what investors will get will vary depending on how the market performs and how long they keep the investment. For a complete overview of the costs connected to an investment in the Fund, please refer to the relevant costs and expenses sections of the offering memorandum. Please refer to the prospectus and to the KID/KIID before making any final investment decisions. The costs connected to investments in the Fund may increase or decrease as a result of currency and exchange rate fluctuations. Investors should be aware that any use of leverage, as applicable, may result in increased returns but also in potential increased losses. The decision to invest in the Fund should take into account all of its characteristics and objectives as described in the prospectus and other fund documentation. For additional information on the sustainability related aspects, please refer to the relevant ESG/SFDR disclosures in the offering memorandum and on www.rhepa.com. All securities' transactions involve risks, which include (among others) the risk of adverse or unanticipated market, financial or political developments and, in international transactions, currency risk. There can be no assurance that an investment in the Funds will achieve profits or avoid incurring substantial losses. There is a high degree of risk inherent in investments and they may not be suitable for all eligible investors. It is possible that an investor may lose some or all of its investment. The past is not necessarily a guide to the future performance of an investment. The value of investments may fall as well as rise and investors may not get back the amount invested. Changes in rates of foreign exchange may cause the value of investments to go up or down.

Before making an investment decision, an investor and/or its adviser should (i) consider the suitability of investments in either of the Funds with respect to its investment objectives and personal situation and (ii) consider factors such as its personal net worth, income, age, risk tolerance and liquidity needs. The Funds are illiquid, and redemptions are limited to specified windows. Investors should be prepared to hold for the long term. Short-term investors and investors who cannot bear the loss of some or all of their investment or the risks associated with the limited liquidity of an investment should not invest.

The Fund is actively managed and is not managed in reference to any benchmark index for portfolio construction
